3d-Termers, Garnerites Shape Texas Compromise

Agreement Mapped At White House May Yield Delegates To Vice President

Setback for Dewey

EFFORTS TO OBTAIN a Dewey-pledged delegation at the Rhode Island G. O. P. convention fail as Gov. Vanderbilt retains control. (Page 2.)

Appeasement Offer

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Party-splitting hostilities between third-term-leaders and Garner-for-President forces in Texas were virtually called off last night.

A basis for compromise of differences, said to have the tacit approval of the President, was wired to both Roosevelt and Garner leaders in Texas following a White House peace conference here.

House Majority Leader Sam Rayburn, close friend of Garner and his 1932 manager, and Representative Lyndon B. Johnson, of Texas, 100 per cent New Dealer and third term advocate, dispatched the telegrams on leaving the White House.

They proposed that the Texas Democratic State convention instruct the Texas delegation for Garner, but acclaim the Administration record and refuse to be a party to any "stop Roosevelt" movement.

Hold Quarrel Is Ended

One copy of the almost identical telegrams went to Undersecretary of Interior Alvin J. Wirtz, who is promoting "draft Roosevelt" sentiment in Austin, Tex., and the other went to Myron G. Blalock, chairman of the Texas Garner-for-President Committee, in Austin.

Pending answers from Wirtz and Blalock, it was indicated that Garner forces here regarded the Lone Star State sniping between Roosevelt and Garner leaders as over.

The President was said to have seen and tacitly approved copies of both telegrams, signed by Rayburn and Johnson, and concluding with the statement: "We feel sure such an understanding would not be displeasing to the President."

Following days of peace negotiations between Garner friends and New Deal leaders, the peace move was believed to have implications far beyond the Texas situation it is designed to meet.

Sure Roosevelt Won't Run

Hereafter "anti-third term" connotations of the Garner campaign are expected to be subordinated, and the "pro-Garner" aspects emphasized. The Garner people have always maintained that the President is not going to run, and still hold that belief.

Meanwhile, Gov. Harold E. Stassen, of Minnesota, keynoter and chairman for the 1940 Republican Convention, conferred with key Republican figures at the Capitol on

Congress Probe Of New Deal Lobbying Urged

By the United Press

A new attack on New Deal agencies was made in the House yesterday when Representative Frank O. Horton (Republican), of Wyoming, introduced a resolution calling for a congressional investigation of "all forms of lobbying" by the executive branch designed to influence legislation.

He said the proposal is directed primarily at the National Labor Relations Board, the Farm Credit Administration and the Interior Department where "there has been damning and conclusive evidence of lobbying."

President's Mother Rallies After Illness Halts Auto Trip

RALLIES—Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, the President's aged mother, is assisted into Manhattan home after sudden illness

By the Associated Press

New York, April 29.—Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, the President's mother, suffered an upset stomach today while motoring and was treated and rested for two hours in a drug store near the New York World's Fair.

Rallying quickly and returning to her town house, the unusually spry 85-year-old mother assured her son, who telephoned from the White House, that she was "feeling fine."

"It was just a little stomach trouble," she told him.

A statement later said no medical treatment had been required at home and that she was asleep by 7 p. m.

Mrs. Roosevelt was returning with a companion from a luncheon when she complained of nausea and ordered her chauffeur to the nearest drug store.

Joseph Porte, the druggist who treated her, said he had merely given her "something for an upset stomach."

After two hours in the care of the druggist, she was able to walk to her car.

As she later climbed the steps of her Manhattan home in the East Sixties, she was heard to say:

"I don't know what happened. I must have been poisoned." She appeared to be joking.

Overtime Pay Rule Change Voted in House

Farm Parity Ballot Delayed; Roll Call On Barden Bill Due

By John B. Oakes

The Administration-opposed Barden bill drastically amending the wage-hour law was made even more sweeping in the House yesterday—but New Dealers chuckled.

Their mirth, whether simulated or real, was explained as a keen desire to see the Barden amendments so overloaded that they will sink of their own weight when the final record roll call vote is taken today or tomorrow.

The Barden bill, which would exempt several hundred thousand workers from the Wage-Hour Act, was yesterday extended by tentative House action to abolish all overtime pay for salaried employes if they work an average of not more than 42 hours a week during a six-month period. This proposal, offered by Representative Hoffman (Republican), of Michigan, was accepted without a struggle by a nonrecord vote of 74 to 38.

Another development interpreted in some quarters as a possible blow to the bill came late in the day, when the leadership decided to defer today's scheduled vote on farm parity payments until after the wage-hour amendments are completed.

Official reason for postponing the parity vote was that members of the WPA investigating committee are

NLRB Disowns Supreme Court Slur by Aide

Disavows Charge That Justice Roberts Favored Financiers

A high-ranking officer of the National Labor Relations Board suggested that Justice Roberts was influenced by the attitude of New York and Philadelphia financial circles in voting to uphold the Wagner Act, the Smith Committee was informed yesterday.

Committee counsel placed in the record a memorandum of Heber Blankenhorn, special investigator for the board, dated April 19, 1937, exactly one week after the court said the Wagner Act was constitutional.

In the memorandum, which he said he wrote for his own use, Blankenhorn asked if "the financial interests" had intimated to Justice Roberts "that a Wagner Act decision was no longer of such vital importance to them."

Soon after the Blankenhorn document was read to the committee, the Labor Board issued a statement declaring that it "dissociates" itself from Blankenhorn's "suppositions regarding the attitude of the Supreme Court, and in particular the attitude of Mr. Justice Roberts" toward the Wagner Act cases.

Asserting that Blankenhorn's observations "were never presented to the board or to members of the staff," the NLRB statement said that they "would have remained unexpressed had they not been

'Campaign Contributions'

Jury Told Whelchel Received $3,200 of Persons Put in Jobs

By the Associated Press

Gainesville, Ga., April 29.—A postal inspector testified today that Representative B. Frank Whelchel (Democrat), Georgia, told him he collected $3,200 in "campaign contributions" from persons he assisted in obtaining Government jobs.

M. H. Ackerman, inspector in charge of the Atlanta division, said the Congressman came to him shortly after agents began investigating reported sale of postal appointments in the Ninth Georgia District. Whelchel, he related, insisted the transactions had been voluntary contributions, and offered to give the agents access to his records.

Whelchel, veteran of three terms in Congress, is on trial on indictments charging acceptance of $2,700 for three postal appointments, and agreement to accept another $1,500 for an appointment which failed to materialize.

Indicted with him and on trial jointly on the first three transactions was H. Grady Jones, Pickens County commissioner, accused by the Government as the go-between for the alleged payments. Both pleaded innocent.

The prosecution called executives of the Postal Department in Washington to testify that political patronage determines appointees for postoffice jobs despite requirement for competitive exami-

Court Backs U.S. Agencies' Decisions

Contract Opinion By Black Opposes Judicial Review Of Administration

By William V. Nessly
Post Staff Writer

The Supreme Court, critical of "judicial supervision of administrative procedure," yesterday refused to upset the Administration's determination of minimum wages in the steel industry under the Walsh-Healey Act.

In a decision delivered by Justice Black, the court held that the Government "enjoys the unrestricted power to produce its own supplies, to determine those with whom it will deal, and to fix the terms and conditions upon which it will make needed purchases."

The court's opinion immediately attracted attention of those interested in the pending Walter-Logan bill, which would provide for court review of rules and regulations issued by administrative agencies of the Government. One passage in the decision read:

"The record here discloses the 'confusion and disorder' that can result from the delays necessarily incident to judicial supervision of administrative procedure developed to meet present day needs of government and capable of operating efficiently and fairly to both private and public interests."

Unionists Jubilant

Administrative forces, including President Roosevelt, have contended that enactment of the bill would delay seriously some operations of Government agencies.

Steel companies had sued in the Federal District Court here to prevent enforcement of Secretary of Labor Perkins' order establishing minimum wages of 62½ cents which must be paid by steel companies obtaining Government contracts. The District Court rejected the plea but the Court of Appeals granted the injunction sought. Yesterday's decision reversed the appellate court.

Jubilant steel union leaders said it meant wage increases for all workers in nonunion plants before those plants can obtain any Government contracts. Philip Murray, chairman of the C. I. O.'s Steel Workers Organizing Committee, told the Associated Press at Pittsburgh that all Bethlehem Steel workers would obtain raises.

"Common labor must now be paid 62½ cents an hour," he said, "an increase of 3 to 6 cents an hour. And as a practical result of the decision raising the base labor pay, semi-skilled and skilled workers will be able to get increases on a proportionate basis."

Word "Locality" is Issue

"Judicial restraint of those who administer the Government's purchasing," Black's opinion said at another point, "would constitute a break with settled judicial practice and a departure into fields hitherto wisely and happily apportioned by the genius of our policy to the administration of another branch of Government.

"Courts should not, where Congress has not done so, subject pur-

President Won't Get a Raincheck At '41 Inaugural

By the Associated Press

If it rains next January 20, the incoming President—whoever he may be—chances a thorough soaking.

The inaugural committee has decided that the historic exercises installing a new Chief Executive will be held again in the open air.

Four years ago, President Roosevelt and thousands of spectators assembled at the east steps of the Capitol were drenched in a chilling January downpour.

David Lynn, architect of the Capitol, explained that an open-air ceremony will take care of the thousands of spectators who pack the plaza in front of the Capitol "just to get a glimpse of the President taking his oath."

"Even if we could afford to build a glass covering of some sort for the President, those people couldn't see," Lynn said.

Collaboration Will Be Needed to Guard Its Own Interests, Van Zeeland Says

By Felix Cotten
Post Staff Writer

The role of the United States in postwar reorganization may be of "decisive importance," Paul Van Zeeland, former prime minister of Belgium, told the United States Chamber of Commerce at a dinner last night.

Its collaboration in the job of rebuilding the war-torn world, he said, will be required for the protection of its own interests.

Creation of "vast economic groups" of nations is an idea that is being stimulated by the war, he declared.

Many people, he said, want to see continued after the war "the intimate union between the French and British empires" resulting from the conflict.

Core of a New World

"On all sides," he declared, "one hears talk of the possibility of making out of this doubly united economic empire the core of a new and powerful world regrouping."

He spoke at the International Chamber dinner of the organization at the Mayflower Hotel. His audience was made up of delegates to the chamber's twenty-eighth annual meeting, which opened here yesterday. About 2,500 delegates will have arrived by today, it is estimated—the largest attendance in years.

Thomas J. Watson, honorary president of the International Chamber of Commerce, explained steps which businessmen, through international cooperation, are making for economic reconstruction of the world after the war.

A committee for economic peace, he said, has been formed under the sponsorship of the International Chamber and the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Watson is chairman. Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank, New York, is a vice chairman.

The purpose, he said, is to work out adjustments of trade barriers to facilitate an international exchange of goods and services which will be fair to all countries, regardless of size.

Commends Hull Pacts

Watson commended Secretary of State Hull's reciprocal trade program, declaring the best thing businessmen could do would be to support it and try to extend it in every way.

He said he favored legislation, if necessary, to "stamp out" subversive propaganda in this country.

Van Zeeland said he had "confidence in gold" as an international monetary medium. But it cannot continue to be the standard means of payment, he warned, if it is all concentrated in the United States. He favored foreign loans by the United States as a means of redistributing gold.

There should be a corresponding influx of goods into the United

Visitor to Bomb-Razed Namsos Finds Troops Slowly Making Good Their Landing, Nazi Air Force Being Curbed

By Edmund deMaitre.

Namsos, Norway, April 29.—After a seven-day visit to the Allied front in the north, I can testify today that if the Allies have not won any brilliant victories in Norway so far, there also is no truth in statements they have suffered a serious defeat.

Real operations have not started on this front because the Allies are busy repairing their base here, damaged by a terrific German air bombardment. The French troops under the command of Gens. Audet and Bethouard are at present taking up positions and expecting daily the arrival of new supplies. The supplies they brought with them were destroyed in Namsos after landing.

No important operations could have taken place so far because of the entire lack of Allied antiaircraft guns and fighting planes, which made it possible for the Germans to fly 500 to 800 feet over the Allied lines and bomb and machine-gun everything that moved. But three days ago antiaircraft guns and fighting planes arrived and the Allied troops could leave the forests where they had been forced to take shelter.

At French headquarters it was stated that what is still needed are lorries and mules, which are absolutely essential for operations in the Trondheim area and these are expected soon. There is no need of food because the food was saved from the bombardment.

Nor is there any truth in the report that the British are ill-equipped, except for their initial lack of planes. They have rifles, antitank guns and light artillery.

"The British troops have everything they need," Maj. Gen. Adrian Carton de Wiart, commander in chief of the British northwestern expeditionary force, told me, "except news. And we are preparing to give it to them in a daily bulletin to inform them of what is happening at home."

At the front north of Steinkjer there is only local fighting between Stockholm, April 29.—Germany's lightning legions struck in a five-forked attack—four from the south and east and one from the north—against Allied positions along the vital Dombas-Storen railway line in central Norway tonight.

The Allies were described as strategically placed, however, with machine-gun nests and light artillery defending their positions.

Up the Gudbrandsdalen, a valley running northwest-southeast across Norway, the Germans were reported in Norwegian dispatches reaching here to have occupied Kvam, 35 miles southeast of the British-held railway junction of Dombas.

Farther east, where the Oesterdalen (Eastern Valley) roughly parallels the Gudbrandsdalen, a German column smashed northwestward from the region of Alvdal to the vicinity of Hjerkinn, where they came upon strong Allied positions. Fighting was reported in progress there, only 13 miles northeast of Dombas.

Norse Battle in Mountains

Norwegian troops were reported fighting a third German contingent tonight at Kvikne, on the snowy highway about two-thirds of the way from Tynset to Berkak, on the railway, south of Storen. This battle began last night and was reported still in progress in exceedingly rough mountain country.

(German dispatches said the invaders had pushed to Inset, a mile or two from Uisberg and within striking distance of the railway.)

The fourth German column from the south sought to push on from

Japanese Army Head Blames War on Tokyo

Charge of Insults Held Most Conciliatory Appeal Yet to China

By the Associated Press

Tokyo, April 29.—Gen. Seishiro Itagaki, former war minister, who now is chief of staff for the Japanese Army in China, said today that the Asian conflict had been brought on in part by Japan's boastful insults to China and worship of things Occidental and Chinese dependence upon Europe and the United States, Domei, Japanese official news agency, reported.

Tokyo observers considered the Itagaki declarations, which Domei said were made in a pamphlet issued to Japanese troops in China, the most conciliatory appeal yet made by the Japanese Army to Japanese and Chinese alike to settle their differences in a pan-Asian movement to combat communism and end Great Britain's "monopolistic position" in East Asia.

Britain and Russia Blamed

Domei said Itagaki blamed Britain and Russia for fomenting anti-Japanese feeling among the Chinese and claimed that one of the Japanese Army's objectives was to "destroy the illusion of an anti-Japanese Chinese regime which is acting on the instigation of Britain, France, Russia and the United States."

Itagaki declared Japan had no quarrel with the Chinese people.

He warned Asia not to expect the European war to last long "because those countries are waging war on a calculated basis."

"Peace, though an armed peace," Itagaki is reported to have predicted, "may come soon," and Japan should expect possible interference "by third powers in search of something they cannot find in Europe."

Italy Plans To Seek More Goods in U. S.

Asks British Approval; Special Trade Envoy Of Duce to Come Here

By the Associated Press

Rome, April 29.—Italy tonight was reported planning to send a special diplomatic envoy to the United States to enlarge shipments of raw materials through the British blockade of Germany.

Although this move was said to depend on British willingness to pass such vital materials as copper and cotton through her contraband control at Gibraltar, Italy offset British optimism for speedy development of better British-Italian trade relations by naming a prominent pro-German, Dino Alfieri, as ambassador to Berlin.

Leaves Tomorrow

Informed diplomatic quarters reported that Adolfo Alessandrini, who holds counselor of embassy rank in the Italian diplomatic service, would leave for New York tomorrow, and would seek an arrangement with British consular authorities for issuance of permits which would allow more raw material shipments from America.

These quarters said the plan had no connection with British efforts to revive British-Italian trade negotiations, now at a standstill.

Exchange Posts

Although it was reported in London that the British foreign secretary, Lord Halifax, had held a "very friendly" talk with the Italian envoy, Giuseppe Bastianini last Friday with a view to betterment of trade relations observers here reserved judgment.

(Meanwhile, possibility of trade talks between Britain and another of Germany's "friends" — Soviet Russia—became a shade stronger when Russia offered to bar re-

2-Alarm Training School Fire Frightens 300 Girl Inmates

More than 300 inmates of the National Training School for Girls, Conduit road at Little Falls road, were thrown into panic last night by a two-alarm fire which damaged the roof of a dormitory.

Robert Bondy, District welfare superintendent, said he was convinced after investigation that the fire was set by one of the seven girls in a block of second-floor detention cells. He expressed the belief she smuggled a match into her cell and set fire to a pile of newspapers wedged between the cell bars and the ceiling.

Officials at the Seventh Precinct said the fire was set simultaneously in two places. They added a conference will be held at the school today by welfare officials, Capt. Clarence Talley, of Seventh Precinct; Fire Marshal Calvin Lauber, officials of the school and a representative of the District Attorney's office to determine what disciplinary steps might be taken.

Earlier, two firemen were injured fighting a blaze which raged for eight hours across 400 acres of forest near Lanham, Md., threatened a score of homes and drove 98 children from the Lanham School. More than 100 volunteer firemen from 17 companies and 60 youths from the

THOUGHTS WHILE SHAVING

ARROGANCE: Some of the cave-dweller social set in Washington cultivate a snobbish attitude toward mere members of Congress which is slightly unseemly in a democracy. No hard feelings, though.

Harlan Miller

MASKED LIBERALS: One of Franklin Roosevelt's saddest oversights has been his failure to exploit the latent liberalism of such gentlemen as Tom Girdler and Ernest Weir. Most Americans have some dormant liberalism—if you scratch for it. At least that's what Weir and Girdler friends say.

* * * *

TAFT'S MIEN: Often when Senator Taft strolls out on the Senate floor his face wears such a beatific expression that awed observers in the galleries feel that he has just come from communion with the Almighty.

* * * *

LONELY SOLONS: Despite the fact that most Congressmen are good mixers and adept at getting acquainted—they have to be, to get elected—scores of them lead exceedingly lonely lives here when away from Capitol Hill, except while entertaining constituents.

"—exploit their latent liberalism"

ALL OUR FAULT: So far the Nazis have blamed us for causing their invasion of neutral countries, and a British spokesman has accused us of being responsible for the rise of Hitler. We have a fairly clean record, though, with respect to the War of Roses and the Second Punic War.

* * * *

DEWEY MONEY: If the Gillette committee publicizes the fact that the Dewey campaigners spent $30,000 in Wisconsin's primary, it may not convince people that $30,000 is excessive for Wisconsin, but it may anger politicians in States where they spend less.

* * * *

WHO WON THIS WAR? In view of the grudging credit given us for our role in the last war, it might be well if the Allied statesmen said out loud, right now, how much they appreciate our help "short of war" now and to come in this one.

* * * *

REVAMPED ORATORY: Readers of the Congressional Record would be more edified—or at least more entertained—if speeches on the floor of the House and Senate were allowed to be printed as delivered, instead of being censored and highly polished afterward.

"—Louisiana supplies a laugh"

HUEY GLORIFIED: Visitors in Baton Rouge who see the heroic statue of Huey Long get a good laugh up their sleeves at the thought that he is still regarded as a hero in the folklore of Louisiana, in view of the aftermath of his regime.

* * * *

IDEOLOGICAL SNARL: When you encounter a chap at a cocktail party who wants Hitler to win the war it's difficult to figure out whether he's pro-German because he's anti-Semitic or anti-Semitic because he's pro-German.

* * * *

RANKING GUEST: Hostesses seem to overplay the preoccupation of Washington with rank and pomp when they list someone of the approximate eminence of the assistant secretary of the committee on the disposal of useless documents as the "ranking guest" at one of their parties.

* * * *

STYPTIC PENCIL: I wonder how many wives of Presidential candidates have planned their White House wardrobes—and whether their husbands have squelched them for extravagance . . . No one looks so inscrutable as a diplomat who has just called on Cordell Hull or Sumner Welles without getting any satisfaction . . . Wonder if the average admiral would feel safer in a battleship being bombed by an airplane or in an airplane being shot at by a battleship?

Rhode Island G. O. P. Rejects Dewey Pledge

Massachusetts Chiefs Back Free Delegation In Primary Today

By the Associated Press

Providence, R. I., April 29.—Rhode Island Republicans, thwarting an insurgent group's plan to place the Nation's tiniest State squarely on record behind Thomas E. Dewey, elected an eight-member unpledged delegation to the G. O. P. National convention today in line with the wishes of Gov. William Vanderbilt.

While Rhode Island's divided Republicans were meeting in State convention, Massachusetts made ready for its Presidential primary tomorrow, when an old age pension group backing Dewey without his authorization will attempt to gain representation.

Massachusetts' chief Republican leaders have called for an uncommitted delegation, relying heavily upon the fact that their slate in opposition to that of the pension group is headed by Gov. Saltonstall, Senator Lodge and House Minority Leader Martin.

Not a Dewey Defeat

Political observers interpreted the outcome of the Rhode Island convention as more of a victory for Vanderbilt than a defeat for Dewey. At least one of the delegates, who were put in the field by the State Republican organization, announced publicly that he would support Dewey in Philadelphia.

Vanderbilt, who had insisted upon an "unpledged, unstacked" delegation, displayed his control over the convention early in the session. With his backing and that of the State organizzation, Herbert M. Sherwood defeated former Attorney General Charles P. Sisson, spokesman for the Dewey-insurgent group, for the convention chairmanship.

The vote was 170 to 113. With that setback, Sisson and his followers promptly abandoned a plan either to force through a Dewey-pledged delegation or to attempt to place some of their own men on the State organization's slate, keeping it unpledged but making it more "favorable" to the district attorney.

Farley Vote Appears Certain

Sherwood's election as chairman was made unanimous. A motion to keep the delegates at large unpledged carried without a dissenting voice. The convention then unanimously elected its eight representatives to the national convention.

Sherwood, in the keynote address, said the Republican convention probably would pick as its Presidential nominee one of the "several men now in the public eye," and added, "there is not a miracle worker among them. For that we may be thankful."

In Massachusetts, a Democratic slate pledged to Postmaster General Farley's candidacy for the Presidential nomination appeared assured of victory tomorrow, but a big percentage of the Farley-pledged group have disclosed that they would vote for President Roosevelt if he seeks a third term.

The Farley slate, backed by most of the State's Democratic leaders, was unopposed for the delegation at large, and faced only unorganized opposition in most of the State's 15 Congressional districts.

Airline Pilots Here to Fight CAA Transfer

'Lobby to Save Lives' Recalls Fatal Crashes Under Former Setup

Pilots from 11 of the nation's airlines, representing, they said, 1,500 who fly the airways on regular schedules, flew here yesterday to throw their weight against transfer of the Civil Aeronautics Authority to the Commerce Department.

The transfer, as well as abolition of the Air Safety Board, was proposed in President Roosevelt's latest reorganization proposal. It was opposed by the Airline Pilots Association as soon as announced.

The pilots who came here yesterday pointed out that they were not interested primarily in their own safety but in that of the thousands of passengers they transport annually.

Recall Fatal Crashes

They recalled the long record of fatal airline crashes when flying was controlled by the Commerce Department and contrasted that record with last year's accomplishment, under the CAA and the Air Safety Board, of no fatal accidents. They called themselves the "Lobby to Save Lives."

The "lobby" included D. W. Ledbetter, American Airlines; R. C. Young, Eastern Airlines; H. L. Smith, Pennsylvania-Central Airlines; Gilbert Blackmore, Pan American Airlines, Eastern Division; Art Mills, Braniff Airways; James H. Roe, Transcontinental and Western Air; C. F. Luethi, Northwest Airlines; H. P. Little, United Airlines; S. W. Hopkins, Chicago and Southern Airlines; Roy T. Elsmore, Western Air Express, and G. E. Rodieck, Mid-Continent Airlines.

Meanwhile, Senator Truman (Democrat), of Missouri, asked the Senate yesterday not to approve the transfer.

He said the reorganization plan would destroy the independence of aviation control and place it in the Commerce Department, "which made such a mess of it" that it was removed from the department's jurisdiction.

Truman said the need of aviation was "independence from political control."

Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, defended the reorganization proposal and insisted it was merely a transfer of functions to be controlled by the same men who now control the CAA and Air Safety Board.

Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, said conditions under the administration of air commerce by the Commerce Department were "disgraceful." He said the death of a United States Senator (Bronson Cutting, of New Mexico, killed in an airplane accident), had speeded enactment of legislation for an independent control of air commerce.

Sen. Green Operated On, Condition Splendid

Operated on yesterday at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Senator Green (Democrat), of Rhode Island, was reported with having come through it "splendid," according to Associated Press.

The Senator kept up a conversation throughout the abdominal operation.

his forthcoming address, and made a forecast.

"We (the Republicans) will defeat Mr. Roosevelt in the Middle West if he is a candidate."

At a morning conference with a small group of House Republicans led by Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, jr., and at a luncheon conference with key minority Senators led by Minority Leader Charles L. McNary, Stassen submitted an outline of subjects and received advice on their treatment.

Points touched on as probable keynote highlights ranged from foreign affairs, the trade agreements program and farm policy, to Federal spending, relief and labor relations.

Stassen indicated he would present a 45-minute "forward-looking" speech, and in a statement issued later by the Republican National Committee said:

"I am convinced as a result of my talks today that the Republican Party at its National convention will offer the country a program of constructive action."

Before boarding a plane for St. Paul, Minn., Stassen conferred with Chairman John Hamilton, of the Republican National Committee, and with members of the committee staff doing keynote speech research. Before he reduces his speech to writing, he said, he will confer with other Republican leaders throughout the country and with labor and farm leaders.

The Garner-Roosevelt peace move followed bitter fighting in Texas for control of the Texas delegation and a blast last week from Secretary of Interior Ickes, chief third-term advocate, at Amon G. Carter, Fort Worth publisher and Garner supporter.

Carter had replied to Ickes yesterday in his Fort Worth Star-Telegram with an open letter, denying Ickes' charge that the Garner movement's purpose is to "defeat Roosevelt." Carter said:

"I have no apology to make for supporting an outstanding Democratic candidate for the Presidency of the United States. Let's not befuddle the issue. The results in Wisconsin and Illinois (where third-term tickets won over Garner) have nothing to do with Texas supporting John Garner."

Ickes had complained of being termed a "carpet-bagger" in a Carter editorial following his recent visit to Texas, and had denied any political activities there.

Carter replied editorially yesterday that Texas is grateful for Ickes' "good job" in helping solve its oil problems, but "we do not necessarily need the same kind of help * * * in respect to political problems in Texas at the moment." The Fort Worth publisher added that if there is "any connection between oil regulation, or even PWA projects, and the question of whether Texas should be allowed peaceably to stand up for its own John Garner, I fail to get it."

Obviously designed to prevent recurrence of such exchanges, and to end intraparty friction now reaching white heat in Texas, the Rayburn-Johnson telegrams laid down the terms for a compromise.

The wire to Wirtz, following almost word-for-word the message to Blalock, read:

"We believe Texas Democrats should make every effort to have harmony in party ranks and that misunderstanding now existing should be ended. You State Texas Roosevelt supporters should indorse native son John Garner and send delegation instructed to vote for his nomination for the Presidency, and Blalock, Garner manager, in public statement says Garner organization and his supporters will insist that State convention approve and acclaim Administration record and will refuse to be a party to any stop Roosevelt movement.

"We think, in the interest of the party and in the light of the above statements attributed to both of you, both sides should get together and send delegation to national convention which will carry out above program. We cannot beat the Republican Party in November if we concentrate on beating each other now. We feel sure such an understanding would not be displeasing to the President."

Undersecretary Wirtz, a native Texan, recently told reporters before leaving for Texas he would "put in some more licks" for a third term. At Texas precinct conventions he is reported to be seeking delegates instructed for Garner only on the first ballot, to be swung to Roosevelt thereafter. Garner managers have insisted on a Garner-pledged delegation "without strings," but privately have indicated they would put up no fight against a third term at the convention if the President actually wanted one.

chasing agencies of Government to the delays necessarily incident to judicial scrutiny at the instance of potential sellers . . . A like restraint applied to purchasing by private business would be widely condemned as an intolerable business handicap."

Seven Companies Objected

The Walsh-Healey Act requires Government contractors to pay the minimum wage prevailing in their "locality." Acting under it, the Secretary of Labor had made a determination of the minimum wage in six "localities," one of which consisted of all States north of Washington and east of Ohio and Kentucky, except a part of West Virginia.

Seven iron and steel companies in this area contended this definition of a locality was too broad and obtained an injunction.

Black termed the lower court's action "sweeping" and observed that "in this vital industry, by action of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, the act has been suspended and inoperative for more than a year."

"Meanwhile, iron and steel were needed to rthe Army and Navy," he said. "In order that the military program could proceed, the declared policy of the Congress was abandoned under judicial compulsion and contracts without a minimum wage stipulation have been awarded for more than $65,000,000 worth of iron and steel products since the injunction issued."

In the memorandum, Blankenhorn had written that the court's decision on the Wagner Act followed two labor victories: the signing of collective bargaining agreements between John L. Lewis and General Motors on February 10 and United States Steel on March 2, 1937.

"Financiers . . . had lost the issue in two major economic conflicts durthe eight weeks preceding Justice Roberts' decision," said Blankenhorn.

"When Lewis, in January, convinced Morgan's, he cast Roberts' vote," the memo continued. Blankenhorn explained on the stand that "Morgans" was a reference to United States Steel.

"For Mr. Justice Roberts to have turned down the Wagner Act in April would have obtained for him, from Philadelphia and New York, this pat on the back: 'Well, you locked the door after the horse was stolen.'" Blankenhorn wrote.

"The part of Hughes, and of legal argument, was that of supplying a plausible way out for Roberts, 'convinced' by the . . . impinging forces," he said. "Of the various impingements, one, Roberts' financial connections, could hardly be disregarded; in fact, it would have to be the first thought of.

Bishop Claimed High Friends, Plot Trial Told

Name Mentioned, Rep. Thorkelson Denies Connection

By the Associated Press

New York, April 29.—William Gerald Bishop, one of 16 men on trial for conspiring to overthrow the Government, was presented today as having named Representative J. Thorkelson, a Montana Republican, as among the members of his "action committee."

(In Washington, Thorkelson denounced as "pure fabrication" the statement attributed to Bishop concerning him. "I don't know anything about this action committee," said Thorkelson, "and I don't care anything about it. I'd like to see anybody prove any such statement.").

The accusation was made indirectly, and not at first hand, in this manner:

The Government offered in evidence a statement attributed to Macklin Boettger in which that defendant was quoted as having said of his alleged coconspirator:

"Bishop stated that (certain) members of the action committee, because of their being an integral part of the Army, would necessarily assist the Army in quelling any Communist revolution; that after quelling the Communist revolution they put action committee men into Congress and the Senate.

Claims High Friendships

"And he claimed that Congressman Thorkelson is already an action committeeman whom he stumped for in Montana. And he also claimed a personal friendship with Senator Reynolds; (claimed that) he knows Senator Vandenberg very intimately and that he is on intimate terms with Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana."

In the manuscript, Bishop likewise was represented as having sought to "inspire" Brooklyn members of the action committee by stating to them these things:

That Boulder Dam once had been "taken over by the Communist-controlled C. I. O. (Congress of Industrial Organizations) and that here . . . groups of citizen-soldiery formed an A. C. unit and forced the C. I. O. men at gun point to reopen the water supply dam for the city and held the C. I. O. men until the National Guard arrived to take over."

That a strike at Hershey, Pa. (nature not identified), was a "Communist strike" which was "broken up by a group of A. C. citizen soldiers."

The testimony concerning Thorkelson recalled that on February 2 he denounced their arrest as a "childish attempt to shield the Communists."

Calls Case Laughable

Thorkelson declared today the Boettger statement was a "pure fabrication" and challenged anyone to prove it. He added, however, that he thought the notion that the 16 defendants would overthrow the Government was "laughable."

"Thirteen rifles!" he explained, referring to the weapons allegedly seized from the defendants. "Why, I've got more rifles than that at home."

Saying that the Government was "wasting its time" prosecuting alleged Christian Front members, he referred to this statement which he put into the Congressional Record February 2:

"The recent fiasco in New York, where 17 young men were arrested for the possession of obsolete rifles, which they used for target practice, is a childish attempt to shield the Communists, who operate openly with the utmost freedom in their attempted destruction of our Government . . .

Praises Mosely, Pelley

Thorkelson declared that "the recent attempt in smearing the Christian Front and the Dies Committee" was Communist-inspired, and added:

"It was this kind of ridicule that was heaped on Gen. Moseley, Messrs. Deatherage, Pelley, True and others because of having exposed and identified the Communists. These gentlemen are 100 per cent patriotic American citizens . . ."

Thorkelson said orally today that he opposed Communism, Nazism and Fascism, but thought the latter two milder than Communism and felt "the Justice Department should go after the Communists."

Dam Incident Denied

Carson City, Nev., April 29 (AP).—Gov. E. P. Carville, of Nevada, said today he "had no knowledge of any incident at any time" at Boulder Dam which would support a statement the dam was "taken over by the Communist-controlled C. I. O."

Sir Malcolm Campbell Wins Divorce on Ground of Adultery

Speed King Names Ex-Business Friend As Corespondent

By the Associated Press

London, April 29.—Sir Malcolm Campbell, for years speed king on land and water, was granted a divorce decree nisi today on the ground of his wife's adultery with Sir Malcolm's former business associate, the Hon. Brian Edmund Lewis.

A decree nisi is a conditional decree which may be made absolute after the expiration of a certain period—not less than six months—unless cause to the contrary is shown.

A few minutes before the judgment was given Lady Campbell, who had answered Sir Malcolm's suit with a divorce petition of her own, charged that he had condoned her adultery with Lewis.

Sir Malcolm, who married Lady Campbell in 1920, earlier in the day had dropped his case against one of two corespondents he had named.

Lewis was ordered to pay the costs of the suit, not including those against the other corespondent nor against a woman cited as a corespondent by Lady Cambell. The woman was dismissed from the case last week when the judge, Mr. Justice Hobson, ordered the hearing to proceed despite Lady Campbell's assertion that she had suffered a nervous breakdown.

Justice Hobson said that perhaps the greatest difficulty in the case was that Sir Malcolm had to ask for discretion, since he admittedly had committed adultery. From the witness stand the former speed king, wearing a bemedaled army uniform, admitted committing adultery with four different women.

Sir Malcolm said that in 1938 he received information from a servant and inquiries disclosed that Lady Campbell and Lewis had stayed together in several places.

In her answer, Lady Campbell alleged that Sir Malcolm had condoned her adultery with Lewis, which, she said, began in 1930 or 1931 and ended in 1934.

It was testifiied that, three years after her marriage, Lady Campbell began keeping letters and photographs as possible "ammunition" in defense of her "adulterous intrigue" with Lewis. The judge, in declining to accept the wife's plea of her husband's condonation and conductive conduct, said:

"She kept anything she could lay her hands on which might be useful as a weapon against her husband. One was a book of photographs relating to events before their marriage."

Campbell testifiied that he took Lewis into his house in 1926 because the latter had quarreled with his father and Campbell was sorry for him. The judge branded as an "unworthy suggestion" Lewis' allegation that Sir Malcolm was inspired by mercenary motives because he (Lewis) was the son of a rich man who might aid Sir Malcolm's business.

A.M.A. Appeal Calls Trust Act 'Commercial'

Professions Exempt From Sherman Law, Supreme Court Told

By the Associated Press

The American Medical Association told the Supreme Court yesterday that the Sherman Anti-Trust Act was intended to be "a commercial statute" and not "to cover acts done in the field of the learned professions."

This assertion was made in appealing from a decision holding that the association and a group of individual physicians must stand trial in the District on Justice Department charges of violating the antitrust law by activities against a Group Health Association.

"There is nothing in the Congressional history of the Sherman Act, or the applicable decisions," the association said, "to support the theory that Congress intended the Sherman Act to cover all occupations in which men are engaged for a livelihood, regardless of whether they are in trade or commerce."

"Restraints alleged to have been visited upon the business of Group Health Association of GHA was the illegal practice of medicine and the illegal carrying on of an insurance operation."

"GHA is a corporation," the appeal continued, "and is engaged in furnishing medical care, in economic rivalry with the petitioners. Concededly, a corporation in the District cannot do this lawfully."

War 'Blacks Out' Foreign Visitors To C. C. Session

Registration lists at the start of the twenty-eighth annual meeting of the International Chamber of Commerce yesterday showed a number of war casualties.

Blacked out by European war were the delegations that have usually come for past annual meetings from France, England, Germany and other countries of Europe.

Businessmen from foreign countries who registered this year were George Hogg, Montreal; Carl Neprud, Shanghai; Ramon Conray, Havana, and Antonia B. Caragal, Madrid.

E. Arthur Baldwin, representing the American Chamber in Paris, who maintains his headquarters in New York City, also was registered, but J. W. Schotte, of Geneva, Switzerland, and John W. Haussermann, Manila, had not arrived.

Summer Nigh, So Trolley Riders, Cave Hunters, Plan Merry Jaunts in Pursuit of Hobbies

Washington, visited again by warm weather, chucks mothballs in its overcoat, unbuttons its vest and feeling the season and the coming of summer, begins making plans, like these:

Reminiscent of the nineties, when 15 miles an hour was whizzing along, the Washington Chapter of the Electric Railroaders' Association, composed of trolley fans, plan a ride for May 30. More than 50 are expected to make the trip over the last three remaining suburban street car lines in the District of Columbia—Beltsville, Cabin John and Benning. They expect to charter a streetcar.

The trolley fans also plan soon to go to Richmond, Va., where they will ride on what is said to be the first electric streetcar line in the country—established there in 1887. The president of the group is Paul D. Gable, a music teacher in Eastern High School.

The Speliological Society of the District of Columbia will go underground in Waynesboro, Pa., this week-end. The society, with a membership of 60, says through its president, William J. Stephenson, 4912 Forty-third place northwest, that it "leans over backward in caution, entering no caves that it can't get out of."

During the spring, the members have been exploring caverns in nearby West Virginia, assembling scientific data. They always are upsetting the rumors of farmers and young daredevils throughout the cavern countryside to the effect that they have crawled into caves that extended 3 or 4 miles underground. The society stresses only its scientific side. In the spring it explores, scouts about the terrain of the caves. In summer the members go underground, looking for fossils and strange formations.

Meanwhile, with outdoors calling, Agriculture Department scientists remind that the dermacentor varia bilis, more familiarly the American dog tick that carries the dread Rocky Mountain spotted fever, is abroad hereabouts. The end of March brought them in, the middle of May will find them spreading to the peak, to be reached the end of May. Their decline comes in midsummer.

The ticks are prevalent in all sections around here, from the Atlantic Coast to the top of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Hikers should beware of them in areas that are grown up in tall weeds and underbrush. The field mice in such environment serve as hosts to the ticks, the scientists said.

With the trees feathering, the landscape class at Corcoran School of Art has gone outdoors for subjects. The class goes out every week-day that finds the weather nice. They are working now at Twenty-ninth street and the C. & O Canal. Richard Lahey, the principal, goes with them twice a week.

Children of Federal employes will have the run of Camp Hi-Catoctin, 1,800 feet elevation, from June 24 to July 3, the Federal Camp Council, sponsors of the Government-built establishment, said yesterday. From July 3 to September 2, Federal employe families take over. The camp council consists of representatives of various Federal recreation and welfare organizations. Hi-Catoctin is 60 miles northwest of Washington, near Thurmont, Md.

The attractions there include 50 nature trails; three recreation lodges, swimming, softball, badminton and archery courts; riding trails and a library. It accommodates 72 persons at a time. This is its second season.

"Hold Your Hats, Trolley Fans"

The finest thing in tennis court construction, according to National Capital Parks officials, will be available to Washingtonians Sunday with opening of the overhauled Taft Recreation Center, Twentieth and Otis streets northeast. The rebuilt courts number five. Improvements have been made at the Chevy Chase, Langdon Park and Rose Park centers.

The Junior Board of Commerce has chartered the new streamlined river vessel, S. S. Mount Vernon, for its maiden run May 16. The new ship, for use of moonlight and daytime river excursioners, has 2,400 passenger capacity. The dance floor will be air-conditioned, will accommodate 1,000 dancers and be free of posts and such obstructions.

Citizens to Meet Tonight to Set Chevy Chase Tax

Citizens of section 4, Chevy Chase, Md., will meet at 8 o'clock tonight in Chevy Chase Elementary School on Rosemary street to fix the section's tax rate.

Residents of the section declared that a determined battle is to be staged at the meeting to obtain a reduction in the 35-cent tax rate now in effect, which the citizens' committee plans to suggest be retained this year.

Chairman W. R. DeLashmutt last night denied reports that the setting of the tax rate would be illegal because it had not been fixed prior to April 1, beginning of the fiscal year in Maryland.

The Montgomery County Commissioners have signed the county levy ordinance, which should include the special tax rate for the section. A majority of the registered property owners voted for the tax rate and so informed the commissioners.

Methodist Body Bars Censure Of Taylor

Rejected After Vatican Relations Are Called 'A Small Matter'

By the Associated Press

Atlantic City, N. J., April 29.—Delegates to the general conference of the Methodist Church rejected overwhelmingly today a proposal to pass judgment on diplomatic relations between the United States and the Vatican.

The council of bishops already had protested against establishment of such relations, and Dr. W. F. Bryan, of Huntsville, Tex., urged his 775 fellow delegates to appoint a ten-man committee to draft a formal statement on the attitude of "this body as a whole."

Dr. Harold Paul Sloan, editor of the New York edition of the Christian Advocate, official church publication, urged the delegates to refrain from public statements on the subject.

Few Favor Proposal

"At this time, when the Christian Church is being attacked on all sides," said Dr. Sloan, "it does not seem becoming for the greatest body in Protestantism to be so nervous over such a small matter."

Only a few hands were raised in favor of Dr. Bryan's proposal.

The Rev. Dr. James W. Moore, of Newport News, Va., chairman of the committee on interdenominational relations, announced that his committee had already prepared a statement on the "Vatican issue" which would be brought before the delegates this week.

Divorce Discussed

The committee on the state of the church, headed by Dr. Ernest Fremont Tuttle, of Evanston, Ill., flatly rejected pleas by five petitioners that the Methodist Church revert to the strict antidivorce rules it maintained before the uniting conference at Kansas City liberalized them a year ago.

Dr. Robert B. Spencer, of Fort Morgan, Colo., chairman of the committee on ministry, announced his group had rejected petitions that full privileges be extended to women ministers.

Removal of Youth From Labor Market Urged by Educators

"Education, provided it is right in amount, distribution and kind, can and will improve the economic welware of the American people," William G. Carr, secretary of the Educational Policies Commission, said yesterday in summarizing recent testimony by a group of educators appearing before the Temporary National Economic Committee.

Among the specific points, he said: "We ought at once to remove youth from the labor market by approval of the Federal Child-Labor Amendment; fixing the school-leaving age at 16 years, at least, in every State; improving the enforcement of school attendance laws." He added:

"Let America proceed to make good on the claim that the United States is a land of equal opportunity by State equalization of educational opportunity among school districts; federal equalization of educational opportunity among States.

"We should encourage the revision and visualization of economic education by better vocational guidance, based on community surveys of ocupational information; better vocational training, utilizing public schools, industry, labor and private efforts; better consumer education; conservation education; health education; vocational retraining for workers displaced by illness, accident or technological changes."

Among other points, he stressed that "we should use free education as one of the means to improve the Nation's economic well being by removing the artifical and financial barriers which now bar many youths of real ability from advanced training which would greatly benefit them and society; destroying the monopoly or partial monopoly in certain occupations by opening up training opportunities."

The Educational Policies Commission is appointed by the National Education Association and the American Association of School Administrators.

Sweden Builds Raid Shelters, Raises Funds

By Elmer W. Peterson
Associated Press Staff Writer

Stockholm, April 29.—Pneumatic drills, chattering like machine-guns, hammered air raid shelters out of solid rock—perhaps the most substantial affairs of their kind ever fashioned—as Sweden gave evidence today of her determination to fight if necessary by heaping up subscriptions to a new defense loan.

Stockholm's air raid shelters are in startling contrast to those I saw the Poles throw up in Warsaw.

Instead of shallow trenches in parks the Swedes have sunk concrete shelters reinforced with tubing and covered over with rocks blasted from the excavations.

It was announced officially that German-Swedish trade discussions had been completed here but that they were to be continued in Berlin on the basis of agreements thus far reached.

Ore Question Revived

This brought new attention to the question of Swedish iron ore shipments to Germany this spring and summer.

Shipping of iron ore down the Gulf of Bothnia is expected to begin shortly, since the ice is breaking up.

It was obvious that Sweden is trying to hold fast to her neutral position as regards ore shipments from Kiruna, only a third of which normally pass through the Swedish port of Lulea and through the Baltic to Germany.

The route across Norway and through the North Sea, however, has been closed by the warfare at Narvik.

The Swedish public rushed to subscribe to a new defense loan of 500,000,000 kronor (about $118,500,000). Indications were that the new loan, gigantic for Sweden, would be subscribed fully in short order.

King Gustaf subscribed 250,000 kronor and Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf and the latters son, Prince Gustaf Adolf, each took up 50,000 kronor of the new issue.

Preparations for defense made it apparent that all Swedish money and efficiency can do is being done to aid the nation to profit from the experiences of unprepared Norway and Denmark.

Koht Denies Complicity

Somewhere in Norway, April 29 (AP).—Norway's foreign minister, Halvdan Koht, today termed entirely false the statement of Germany's foreign minister, Von Ribbentrop, that Norway knew of and approved English plans to mine Norwegian waters.

Koht declared the British mining announcement on April 8 came as a complete surprise to the Norwegian government, which immediately protested and demanded that the mines be removed.

He added that the government had decided that if the British did not take up the mines the Norwegian navy would be ordered to do so.

The British mines were laid the day before Germany marched into Denmark and Norway.

Nazis Active In Mexico City, Says Del Vayo

Propaganda Agents Fill Legation, Claims Ex-Aide of Loyalists

By George B. Bookman.
Post Staff Writer

Germany's legation in Mexico City is a warren for Nazi propaganda agents, Julio Alvarez del Vayo, formerly foreign minister of the defunct Spanish loyalist government, asserted here yesterday. He had just returned from Mexico.

VAYO

"No less than 206 persons are doing propaganda work in the Germany embassy in Spain," he told The Post yesterday. "The same situation exists in Spanish America.

"When I was Ambassador to Mexico (1931-1933) the staff of the German legation did not exceed normal size . . . Today the German legation consists of 37 'diplomats,'" del Vayo said.

The former loyalist statesman and his 11-year-old son, Diego, occupied a room at the Hotel Washington.

"Come into the room of a Spanish refugee," he said.

Seeks Homes for Refugees

This greeting bespoke the task that has occupied del Vayo for many months past—finding new homes for Spanish refugees who are no longer welcome in their native land.

Mexico has provided new homes for 10,000 Spanish refugees, del Vayo said. They have come there through the SERE, central relief organization headed by Dr. Juan Negrin, the former Spanish premier.

Several thousand others have settled in Chile, Santo Domingo and Argentina, del Vayo added.

Del Vayo found on his trip to Mexico, he said, that Spanish refugees settling there have been able to fit quickly into the industrial and agricultural life of the country.

"No Spanish loyalist in Mexico goes to bed cold or hungry," he said.

The future of Spain in a Europe at war is uncertain, Del Vayo believed, but he holds some hope for partisans of the loyalist regime.

2-Alarm Fire Hits Training School

CCC camp at Beltsville were called before the flames were brought under control. The school, where the children huddled in the yard along Defense highway, was saved by backfiring.

Inmates of the burned reformatory building said Margaret Shorter, 16, in a detention cell for attempting to escape, was burned on the body and cut about the face and hands when she broke a window, and Boudy declared a girl was slightly cut. The blaze was confined to part of the Shaw Building, which housed 25 colored girls, 16 to 19.

Mrs. Etta Walker, matron in charge of the building, said she discovered the hallways filled with smoke and saw flames overhead when she was attracted by screams of her charges. She turned in an alarm, summoned Miss Jean Bromley, night matron, and herded the girls into a room at the end of the building opposite the fire, where they huddled, screaming to be taken out.

Girls in the other buildings, aroused by the arrival of fire apparatus added their shrieks to the din. Several thousand spectators gathered outside the windows, to whom the girls complained loudly about their food and the treatment accorded them, demanding the place be investigated.

Traffic on Conduit road and along Little Falls road was so heavily jammed firemen arriving on the second alarm had difficulty reaching the blaze.

In the nine hours preceding the reformatory fire, 32 alarms were turned in in the District. Nine were concentrated in the two hours from 7 p. m. to 9 p. m. and six in the hour between 8 and 9. Three false alarms were rung in 20 minutes shortly after 8:30 and 10 calls were to brush grass and woods fires.

Children at the Lanham School were taken out into the front by Mrs. Rosemary Boehlert, the principal, when the flames reached the woods back of the school.

The firemen told the teacher it would be best to keep the children in school, that there was no danger after the backfiring had kept the fire from spreading to the ball diamond in back. The only possible danger was from sparks on the roof, they said.

Mrs. M. L. Harvey, trustee of the school, who also had a child in the school, saw the fire and hurried to the school. She remained all afternoon to aid the teachers.

The men hurt were Terry Dorsey, of Riverdale, who was cut and overcome by smoke, and George Lee, of Mount Rainier, slightly burned. Trapped by flames, Lee dived into a small creek, where he lay until the fire roared over and past. Both men were treated by the Prince Georges rescue squad.

While all available companies were battling the Lanham blaze, other fires were reported at the Bureau of Standards radio receiving station near Forestville and near District Heights on the Marlboro Pike. Several companies were sent from the Lanham fire, to return after they had finished the new jobs.

Companies which responded to the Lanham alarm were from Bladensburg, Cottage City, Glendale, Bowie, Boulevard Heights, Riverdale, Riverdale Heights, Hyttsville, Brentwood, Mount Rainier, College Park, Berwyn, Berwyn Heights, Tuxedo and Cheverley, Hillside, Capitol Heights and Branchville.

Late yesterday, all available Prince Georges County firemen and CCC enrollees were fighting the fire which, fanned by a mild, but steady wind, spread along a 400-acre front. Earlier in the day, 125 children were evacuated from the Lanham Elementary School as the flames spread near the structure. Lower—Flames roaring through pines

87 With Tickets Fixed Include Blood Donor

Officials Concerned Over Loss of Revenue As List Grows

Five persons claiming diplomatic immunity, two who were working with detectives, and one who was donating blood were among 87 who had their traffic tickets adjusted last week, police disclosed yesterday.

The weekly list was released for publication under order of the Commisioners. Seventy-three persons were excused with warnings, while 14 had their tickets canceled outright.

Homer Zirkle, of 2137 K street northwest, and William D. Prince, of 1263 Morse street northwest, showed proof they were working with detectives when their cars were tagged. Helen D. Leon, of Cleveland, got off with a warning because she was arranging for an emergency blood transfusion at Emergency Hospital.

The growth of the "Ticket Fixing" business brought some concern to city officials, who looked at it from the standpoint of lost revenue.

Some of the alibis last week were a bit out of the ordinary.

Samuel Schoen, of 1242 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, parked overtime, he said, because he was attending a funeral, while Blanche Moore, of Arlington, Va., explained she was a member of a wedding procession.

Mrs. Margaret P. Heine got off with a warning because she had a good record and had to attend a Parent-Teacher Association meeting, of which she was president.

Sympathy was won by Henry E. Juenemann, of 2448 Huedekoper place northwest, who explained his parking violation by saying: "I was in a doctor's office and couldn't leave." Emily B. East, of 1456 Irving street northwest, said she was on a "charitable mission."

Claiming diplomatic immunity were Dr. Bruno Siemers, German Embassy; Teodoro Santiesteban, Cuban Embassy; Hara Tamenori, Japanese Embassy; James E. Gibbs, an employe of the Mexican Embassy, and Mrs. Mary A. Coleby, wife of an attache of the British Embassy.

Scientists Plan Lingo Laymen Can Savvy

Even if it takes 10 years and the obsolescence of the decibel to do it, the citizen for whom violent noise is a torture is going to have a lot more quiet than he got in the last decade.

The American Acoustical Society was in Washington yesterday, and that, in effect, was the promise born by a tangle of technical language that opened its twenty-third annual meeting at the United States Bureau of Standards.

The first step, according to Dr. F. R. Watson, society president and University of Illinois physicist, will be to rewrite for the layman's understanding, some of the language in which sound scientists heretofore have discoursed on the subject.

The word "decibel," the unit for measuring the loudness of sound, may be transformed into something like "pounds of pressure per square inch," so that scientifically unenlightened citizens may understand what is taking place on his ear drums when a street car clatters across Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue.

Dr. Watson opined that the science of noise reduction might be made more understandable to prospective purchasers of sound-proofing equipment, if it could be demonstrated that a closed door, for example, may cut noise one-thirtieth. It has been the habit of sound engineers, he observed, to speak of decibel reduction.

In a lecture room where the chief distracting noise was produced by an alarm clock set to ring when each speaker had consumed his alloted time, Victor Jacobson, sound engineer, testified to the progress of silence in at least one direction.

Jacobson told how airplane motor testing chambers had been made relatively quiet by construction of intake and outlet flues of ribbon walls of porous stone. Previously the chambers, Jacobson said, had given off noises so loud they "passed the threshold of hearing, becoming a pain in the ear and bothersome miles away."

Senate Backs Roosevelt Grip On Alien Funds

President Freezes Assets Within U. S. To Prevent Seizure

By International News Service

Brushing aside Republican charges that the Administration already is planning to advance credits to Britain, the Senate yesterday passed a bill confirming President Roosevelt's action in "freezing" Norwegian and Danish assets in this country.

The purpose of the legislation is to guard the credits in the United States of Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Holland and other small nations against any possibility of seizure by Germany.

The Democratic majority quickly rejected Republican amendments which would greatly curtail White House powers over credits and other monetary matters.

Vote of Confidence Claimed

Passage of the bill was promptly hailed by New Dealers as virtually a vote of confidence for the President in his handling of the delicate international situation. Final approval was given without a record vote.

Leading the opposition, Senator Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, branded the bill as "another power grab." He warned the Senate that the Administration has begun consideration of a broad fiscal plan aimed to bolster Allied credits in this country.

"It is not too far fetched," Danaher declared, "to say that there is under consideration right at this moment a plan by which such securities, nationalized by countries at war, may be hypothecated through American corporations—may be made the basis of the issuance of credits through American banking institutions such as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This power can be used to subject all stocks and securities generally to regulation and control, even down to the person who is going to conduct the transaction."

Iron Grip Is Charged

Danaher warned that the legislation would vest in the President power over fiscal affairs greater than ever given an executive before.

"If this is passed," he said, "the President could control every foreign exchange transaction of an American, and hold an iron grip over all trading in stocks and bonds in this country. We are not at war with anybody, and we should not permit this regulation, control and interference in and over normal fiscal activities."

To offset some of the opposition to the bill, Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, handling the legislation on the floor, accepted an amendment declaring the measure would not contravene the Neutrality Act or the Johnson Act, which bans further credits to nations which are in arrears on their World War debts.

U.S. Consul Says Swedes Are 'Apprehensive'

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, April 29.—Lynn W. Franklin, American consul at Stockholm, who arrived today on the United States liner Washintgon, said that a Swedish diplomat had told him before he left Sweden April 13 that the nation had official assurance from Berlin that German troops would not enter Sweden unless the country was invaded by the British.

"Everybody in Sweden is apprehensive," said Franklin, "but they are not scared, because they are determined to fight. I imagine they anticipate an invasion more from Germany than from the British, but no one knows what will happen."

There were about 1,200 Americans in Sweden, Franklin said. Few would want to leave, he said, because most of them had personal or business ties which would keep them there.

Franklin was accompanied by his wife and their four children, and with them were about a dozen women and children, including members of the families of American diplomats, ordered home because of war conditions.

The Franklins had in their charge the three children of Mr. and Mrs. Knute Thyberg. Thyberg is Swedish charge d'affaires at Ankara, Turkey, and his wife, an American, is with him. Their children were met at the pier by their grandmother, Mrs. Tracy Dows, of Washington.

The refugees from Sweden included Mrs. Fritz A. M. Alfsen, Mrs. Ethel M. Snow, and Mrs. Helen B. Jenkins, whose husbands are consular officials.

Others aboard the liner were Brig. Gen. Sherman Miles, new assistant chief of staff in charge of the Army Intelligence Service in Washington, who has been military attache in London; Commander Gordon W. Nelson, assistant naval attache in London, and Bertel E. Kuniholf, retiring American consul in Riga, Latvia, who will soon leave to take up his new post as consul to Iceland.

Girl Who Cycled in Europe Gets Letters Indicating Fears There

Tariff Commission Aide Asked if Ship Saw Any Submarines

RHEA EHLERS

Rhea Ehlers, of the Statistical Section, Tariff Commission, who pedaled a bicycle 3,000 miles last summer in Germany, France, England and the Scandinavian countries, has received letters from acquaintances indicating something of the state of mind over there.

A boy in Nurnburg, Germany, inquired whether the ship she came back on encountered any German submarines. He wanted to know how America felt about Europe. The letter had been opened by British and German censors.

A friend in Alvdaleden, Sweden, was much afraid of what might happen to them. They were much in sympathy with Finland in its plight and regarded the situation as a threat from the East.

Two Scottish boys, in the English service, commented that England must stop Hitler and were "relying on the English sense of humor" to win with.

Miss Ehlers, who lives at 1821 Nineteenth street northwest, made the bicycle trip in company with Miss Georgia Rhodes, of the Interior Department. They plan to travel, on bicycle, through New England this summer.

Alfaro Charges Terrorism In Panama Presidential Race

Outbreaks of violence in the Panama presidential election June 2 seems inevitable as a result of a "reign of terror" carried out by the Panamanian government, Horacio J. Alfaro declared yesterday.

The object of the terroristic practices, he said, is to prevent the election of his brother, Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro.

Supporters of Dr. Arnulfo Arias, the candidate of the regime in power, he declared, are "resorting to all sorts of nefarious practices and brutal measures of oppression worthy of comparison only with the worst methods of the Nazi regime in Germany."

Formerly Envoys Here

If there were a free election, he declared, his brother would win, "just as Joe Louis would whip a lightweight." The situation which exists, however, he said, is comparable to "Joe Louis trying to fight a lightweight with his hands tied behind his back."

Horacio Alfaro, who, like his brother, formerly was Panamanian envoy to Washington, said many of his brother's supporters felt that the only way to deal with the situation was "to meet force with force."

"But they have no arms," he said. "They are determined to go to the polls if they have to fight with their nails. And the government seems to be determined to prevent them."

Blames Dr. Boyd

He declared that Dr. Augusto Boyd, former envoy to Washington and now President of Panama, would be responsible for "whatever may happen in Panama," due to his failure "to maintain an impartial attitude during this campaign."

His brother's supporters, he said, have been clubbed, jailed, denied permits for clearing land or sowing crops, and, in the case of victims of the recent fire at Colon have been denied government relief.

He said previously that a cache of arms, seized Sunday by the Panama police and declared by them to belong to his brother's supporters, had been planted by the government as the basis for a frame-up prosecution of his brother's followers.

"Fairy Tales," Says Envoy

George Boyd, now Panamanian Ambassador and brother of the present president, characterized the charges as "fairy tales," following a conference on another matter with Undersecretary of State Welles.

He referred newsmen "to your own officials in the State Department for unbiased evidence of how baseless these charges are." He said his brother had not only permittted freedom of the press, but tolerated "an anarchical press."

State Department officials declined comment on the charges and countercharges. Such comment, they pointed out, might be construed as intervention, a practice which this Government's policy forbids.

Dewey Stays in Bed, Condition Improved

Colorado Springs, Colo., April 29. District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, ill several days with an upset stomach, remained in bed today under doctor's orders, but his condition was greatly improved and his temperature was normal.

Dr. John A. Sevier, told him he could resume his campaign Thursday.

Allies Battling Nazi Columns For Rail Town

At Grips With Three Of Five Trying To Encircle Dombas

Roros, on the Oesterdalen Railway, to Storen.

From German-occupied Trondheim, a port keenly desired by the British, a fifth German detachment was driving southward in the hope of connecting with the German units coming up from the south.

Probable objective of the German column from Trondheim was Storen, 35 miles to the south, and junction point of railways and highways from Roros and Dombas. This column's best chance appeared to be a junction with the Nazi troops from Roros, 50 miles southeast of Storen.

To escape crippling of the southern arm of their broad pincer movement on Trondheim, the British must maintain their positions along the railway from Dombas northward to Storen as well as the branch from Dombas westward to Andalsnes, a British landing point.

Allies Rush Aid

[The United Press said it was reported Allied reinforcements had been rushed to the Dombas-Storen line from two new debarkation points. One was reported to be at Sunndal, on Sunndal Fjord, 30 miles northeast of Andalsnes. These troops could have been sent 40 miles up the Driva River to Opdal, on the railway, whence they could reinforce Allied positions either at Storen to the north, or Hjerkinn to the south.

[The second new landing point was said to be on Nord Fjord, 62 miles southwest of Andalsnes, and troops landed there were assumed to have been sent overland to the line at Otta, 20 miles southeast of Dombas.

The correspondent of the Stockholm Aftonbaidet wrote from "somewhere in Norway" that the area between Dombas, Alvdal, Roros and Storen appeared destined to become the major battlefield of central Norway.

This sector, about 50 by 65 miles in area, is bounded on the south by a highway from Alvdal to Hverkinn and Dombas and on the other three sides by railroads.

It is extremely rugged, studded by 4,000 and 5,000-foot mountains and crossed by only one road, that from Tynset to Ulsberg.

This correspondent said the first major British-German encounter occurred between British-held Otta and German-seized Kvam.

Centers on Storen

Because of the difficult country between the two railways, the Germans were reported seeking to concentrate on the easier route from Roros to Storen, which is the gateway to Trondheim.

(German reports said the unit pressing northward from Roros did indeed appear to have the best chance of connecting with that coming southward from Trondheim and that the two already were within 25 miles of a meeting, although the probable location of such a union was not designated.

(The British war office reported that positions in the Gudbrandsdalen were "unchanged" and that there had been heavy German air attacks on Andalsnes and Molde, Allied landing points on the west coast.)

Namsos Raid Balked

In the Namsos sector, north of Trondheim, German bombers, attempting to repeat previous attacks which have reduced Namsos to a pile of ashes and debris, circled the British base six times today but discovered the Britons have effectively ringed it with antiaircraft defenses.

Only once were bombs dropped. On the last trip, one bomber flew over the railway station and powerhouse but was forced to beat a hasty retreat when British shells popped all around him.

A British communique this afternoon said one enemy airplane had been shot down.

The communique, telling of fighting at the front, said British patrols ambushed a German detachment today, killing several and taking some prisoners. Enemy patrols were repulsed.

"British land forces are in touch with the enemy north of Steinkjer," the communique said.

A Maj. Toereng, director of the French hospital at Namsos, informed the Associated Press correspondent that the French had lost seven dead in the last eight days and one today. There are 27 wounded in the hospital.

The majority of the troops here are British, from Yorkshire, who recently arrived from the Western Front in France.

Namsos has the appearance of any Western Front town during the World War, with streams of troops and ambulances coming and going.

Reports from Narvik, the iron-ore port in the Arctic, said guerrilla warfare had developed, with periodic British bombardment, apparently designed to prevent German reinforcements.

The British war office said there was nothing to report from Narvik.

Action in the Dombas Sector

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

A battle which may decide control of central Norway shaped in the Dombas sector as a German column struck at the railway to Hjerkin (1), menacing an Allied force at Storen (2) with pincer action. Another German force had reached Roros (3) and was digging in for battle. To reach Hjerkinn the German force pushed over a narrow mountain road from Alvdal (4). The main Nazi drive on Dombas was reported stalled 15 miles north of Kvam (5). Norwegians at Kvikne (6) were reported resisting another German column thrusting at the Dombas-Storen Railway. Additional British troops were reported to have landed at Sunndal individual patrols. Behind the lines, however, tremendous work is being accomplished for later operations. Between Steinkjer and Snasas and Namsos and Grong the Allies control every important strategic position and these positions are being fortified and the roads cleared of snow.

Allies Have Just Begun to Fight in Norway

The greatest problem now is the urgent need of airdromes, but work on new airdromes at places, whose names I naturally cannot reveal, is already under way.

"We did not come to wage a blitzkrieg," said one French general, "but when we are ready we will make a war which will be effective. I admit that this preceding is perhaps less spectacular than the German, but I assure you it is much better."

The reason why the Allied forces could not strike immediately can be explained by the arrival of new German troops by air from Denmark. According to the calculations of Allied staff officers, there are now 40,000 Germans in Norway while the Allies have only 25,000 in the expeditionary forces based at Narvik, Namsos and Andalsnes. Thus, it is evident that Allied reinforcements are absolutely necessary.

Incidentally, I can emphatically deny the rumors in the neutral and German press that detachments of the French Foreign Legion are in Norway. There are no units of the Foreign Legion among the French expeditionary forces, which consist for the most part of Chasseurs and Alpins from Alsace and Savoy.

The weather is fair and the Allied troops do not suffer from the cold, even if they are compelled to sleep in the snow. This latter necessity arises only for patrols. The main body of the troops is billeted.

Norse Troops Reorganize

Grong, Norway, April 29 (AP).—Pushed back in the first days of the German attack because they had insufficient time to mobilize, Norwegian troops now have effected liaison with French Alpine fighters along the shore of Snasas Lake just north of Steinkjer.

The contact was made after a battle early yesterday morning in which the Germans lost at least ten men, with many wounded, while Norwegian losses were slight.

Reaching the front late yesterday afternoon after an arduous trip overland, the last part of it on foot through deep snow on the hills and heavy mud in the valleys, I entered a Norwegian machine gun outpost.

To my left, rifle fire was intermingled with the chatter of machine guns.

The Norwegians, dressed in white, like the Finns, lay in the snow. Those in the heavily forested sections wore green that blended perfectly with their surroundings.

By 7:25 p. m. I was within 300 yards of the German outposts. The Norwegians there said the Germans had been dressing in civilian clothing in an attempt to outwit them, but that the ruse had failed.

The chief fighting was along the lower shore of the lake. Col. Ole Getz, commander of the Fifth Norwegian Brigade, told me that, in all, Norwegian losses in this sector have been about 30 and the British losses "perhaps heavier."

So far the Norwegians have not been able to make contact with the British, chiefly because the British lack skis, which are needed to negotiate the terrain.

Col. Getz explained that most of the Norwegian losses were men assumed to be dead because they were missing, but added:

"We now are in a part of the country where our men can fight.

"On the night the Germans came we began mobilization, for which it was necessary to get clothing and quartermaster's stores in this area. We succeeded only because the Germans wasted some days."

Young Undisturbed Over Renaming Georgetown Street

Commissioner John Russell Young apparently doesn't share the indignation of Georgetown citizens over the proposed renaming of Jefferson street.

Although he lives on Jefferson place off Connecticut avenue, Young said he had no sentiments over the name one way or another.

He thought the plan to change the Georgetown thoroughfare to Thirtieth place was a "good thing."

Georgetown citizens have a different view. A group led by Mrs. J. L. Goodman, 1071 Jefferson street, planned to protest to Young because of his Jefferson place connections. Until the protesting group present their pleas in person, the Board of Commissioners will go ahead with scheduled plans, Young declared.

nations. The three leading candidates are determined by examination, it was explained, but final appointment rests on political recommendation.

J. M. Donaldson, Deputy First Assistant Postmaster General, and J. W. Cole, Deputy Second Assistant Postmaster General, testified that it was regular practice for the Postal Department to "consult" the Congressman of the district where the vacancy occurs and be guided by his recommendation.

Donaldson said since 1935 appointments in the Ninth District had been on recommendation of Representative Whelchel.

The prosecution charged Whelchel collected $500 for the appointment of Maynard Mashburn as postmaster at Tate, Ga., in 1939 and $1,100 each for the appointments of Hulon Holcomb and Paul Grogan as rural carriers at Ball Ground, Ga.

Potocki Reported Slated for Ouster

London, April 29 (U.P.).—Reports were current in diplomatic circles today that the Polish government soon intends to remove Ambassador Jerzy Potocki from Washington.

He was prominently mentioned in the recent German white book purporting to describe the part of the United States in the events leading to the European war. Jan Ciechanowski, formerly Minister to the United States, was mentioned as a possible successor.

IN A TRADE IT'S THE MONEY DIFFERENCE THAT COUNTS GET THIS ITEMIZED INVOICE WHEN YOU BUY AND ✓ Know what you're paying;
✓ Know what you're getting;
✓ See the value in the car;
✓ See all items in the price.

MOST people who buy automobiles these days have an old car to trade in. And many of them think they get the best "deal" when they buy where they get the biggest allowance for that car.

But as you can easily see, what really matters in a trade is the money difference between the old-car allowance and the new-car delivered price.

For the new-car delivered price may be "packed"—an extra amount may be slipped in to provide for a bigger allowance on the old car.

You think you get a better deal—but you may find you are actually paying out more money in the end.

It's easy to see the money difference you pay when you buy from a General Motors dealer.

Big price charts on our walls and "plain-view" price tags on our cars show all items in our delivered prices—the charge for the car itself, the charge for transportation, based on rail rates, our charge for extra equipment or accessories you elect to buy.

In addition, we give you an itemized invoice when you buy. This provides the same detailed information, and further shows how much we allow for your old car, and clearly states the money difference to be paid.

Thus we General Motors dealers provide a threefold protection against "packed" new-car prices.

They all help you buy on real value instead of used-car allowances alone. Come in and see for yourself how they help you get the most for your money.

This is the standard price tag used by General Motors dealers to show what makes up the prices of new cars delivered to customers. "PRICE OF CAR" means the price we charge for the car itself, including reimbursement for Federal Tax and conditioning—"TRANSPORTATION CHARGE" means a charge for transportation from factory to you, based on rail rates—"OPTIONAL EQUIPMENT AND ACCESSORIES" means the charge for any extra equipment or accessories you elect to buy.

BEFORE YOU BUY, BE SURE THE FINANCE CHARGES SATISFY YOU

5-Ply German Push Launched On Andalsnes

Oslo and Trondheim Columns 25 Miles Apart, Berlin Says

By the Associated Press

Berlin, April 29.—A British attempt to squeeze the German-held port of Trondheim in a 200-mile pincers movement has backfired into a German push from five directions on Allied forces in central Norway, an authoritative source here indicated tonight.

These sources said the Allied attempt to clamp twin holds on Trondheim from Andalsnes, 100 miles south of Trondheim, and from Namsos, an equal distance north of the port, had been converted into a five-ply German movement on Andalsnes.

It was said there is a prospect that the British troops who came ashore at Andalsnes soon will be in difficulties.

The strength of the British landing party at Andalsnes is not known here, but has been estimated at about a brigade of 8,000 men.

The German air force was active again today off the western coast of Norway and a great number of British transport ships were damaged, with one set afire, DNB, official German news agency, reported.

(The British war office said heavy enemy air attacks on Andalsnes and Molde, another port west of Andalsnes, had been carried out, but mentioned no damage.

The Germans were said to be driving southward from Trondheim to meet another German force pushing up the Osterdalen (Eastern Valley) from Oslo. The troops were reported within 25 miles of meeting, although the point of the expected junction was not designated.

Meanwhile, unofficial observers are giving the closest attention to possible action north of the Moselle River on the Western Front. That area was described as the only conceivable spot where the rival main German-French forces could really get at each other.

Repeated assertions of the Germans that the war will be over in a year invites belief that an effort may be made to destroy the French army by attacking its weakest westward flank.

There was no official indication that anything was afoot on the Western Front, but observers remained on the alert for possible early developments.

Duce Seeks to Buy More U. S. Goods

export of British goods to Germany. Still obstructing negotiations, however, was Soviet rejection of Britain's demand for a limit on Russia's exports of her own goods to Germany.)

The British economic expert, E. W. Playfair, left Italy without accomplishing anything of importance.

Alfieri, who has been ambassador to the Vatican, will exchange posts with Bernardo Attolico, Italian envoy to the Reich for nearly five years.

When Alfieri was removed from the important propaganda post of Minister of Popular Culture six months ago and made envoy to the Holy See, diplomatic observers said it evinced a cooling of Italian enthusiasm for the alliance with the Reich.

The same quarters said today Alfieri's assignment to Berlin indicated a reversal of Italian feeling.

One rumor was that Alfieri might try to induce the Germans to soften their treatment of the Catholics in Poland.

The authoritative Fascist newspaper, Il Giornale d'Italia, said Alfieri was "the man who knows profoundly all axis problems" and recalled that as minister of popular culture he had laid the basis for "new spiritual relations" between Germans and Italians.

There appeared to be no doubt his appointment entered into Italy's newly emphasized pro-German policy.

Officials, however, declined to make any comment on reports abroad that the class of 1906 had been called to the colors. If members of that class have been called it was regarded in foreign circles as likely they were only specialists summoned for a short period of training.

Authoritative quarers believed Playfair's discussions here manifested Italian willingness to buy some 250,000 tons of British coal and a general Italian desire to increase her trade with Britain.

Observers thought it not improbable that Playfair's successor, expected here shortly, may open more formal trade negotiations, but they saw no indication that British-Italian commercial discussions would indicate any rift in Italian-German political collaboration.

Complains About Blockade

Copyright by New York Times

London, April 29.—Italy has lodged a new complaint about the severity of the Allied blockade, Italian quarters said tonight.

This complaint made in a recent talk between Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax and Italian Ambassador Bastianini during which Anglo-Italian trade and political relations were discussed.

Bastianini pointed out that several Italian ships had been held up much longer than seemed necessary. Halifax took note of the specific cases mentioned by the Italian Ambassador and agreed to investigate. At the same time he explained that it was impossible for Britain to relax its guard against material which might be going to Germany.

It is understood the tone of this conversation was cordial and it was stated in British official quarters tonight that there is now some possibility that the trade talks which were suspended earlier in the year will be resumed.

Invited Parley

The talks originally broke down over the British refusal to allow Italy to ship German coal through the blockade plus a refusal to sell British coal to Italy unless the Italians agreed to exchange arms and other military equipment.

Since then, however, political relations between the two countries have steadily deteriorated and it was in an effort to halt this somewhat alarming trend that Halifax asked Bastianini to call.

It is evident that the British are now no more willing to do business with Rome on Rome's terms than two months ago. They cannot, of course, enter into trade relations which they feel may work to the advantage of Germany but with this one qualification, they are now, apparently, willing to make a few concessions which it is felt would result in an improvement of Anglo-Italian political relations.

London Gloomy Over German Aerial Successes in Norway

By the Associated Press

London, April 29.—Damaging attacks by low-flying German bombers on the Allied troop landing bases of Molde and Andalsnes emphasized in British minds tonight the belief that control of the air will be the decisive factor in the major battle which slowly is developing in central Norway.

Aware that German planes also are harrying British lines of communication and protecting the German columns moving swiftly from the south toward the garrison in Trondheim, London was gloomy after a week of indifferent news from the north.

Fear was expressed that Germany's apparent command of the air might enable the Germans to complete a junction of their northern and southern forces and thus isolate the Allies.

Admiralty Silent

German bombing, which had slackened over the week-end, apparently was renewed with increased energy, despite a battle befighting planes over Lake Engeset near Andalsnes, in which several planes were reported to have crashed.

The admiralty remained silent on the question which has occupied many neutral attaches:

"Do the British contemplate forcing an entrance into Trondheim Fjord and bombing the German garrison before a junction can be effected with the forces from Oslo?"

One neutral attache pointed out it would be "dangerous business," and then added, "but the British navy is used to that."

Neutral military men declared that if the British were driven out of Dombas, the Germans might divert their columns toward Andalsnes and strike at the British there.

(There were indications in Berlin that this might be the German plan of action.)

Hang On at Dombas

Most observers held, however, that the main German objective would be to join the forces at Trondheim and then "mop up" isolated Allied detachments to the south by the pincer attacks.

From Norway came reports that Allied forces in the Gudbrandsdalen and Osterdalen, the valleys which provide the main lines of communication between Oslo and Trondheim, were facing increased pressure.

The British were reported hanging on at Dombas and at Kvam, 25 miles south. (Stockholm reports said Kvam had been occupied by the Germans.)

From the admiralty came a flat denial of what was said to be German claims that five British warships and 13 transports had been sunk or badly hit within the last 48 hours. The admiralty made a counterclaim that three German supply ships were "torpedoed and sunk." The only British losses, the admiralty said, were two trawlers, the Hammond and Larwood, which were lost without casualties.

(Various German reports did not claim these losses, saying that a total of 11 transports and four warships have been hit and damaged or sunk by aerial bombs in two days.)

Premier Sees Opposition Heads

An official British statement reported 28 German transport and more "hit by torpedoes and probably supply ships sunk since April 8; 10 sunk;" 1, named the Maine, scuttled, and some losses "due to mines" suffered by the German expeditionary force "since the Nazis embarked on their Scandinavian adventure."

The war office reported, in addition to the "heavy enemy air attacks" at Molde and Andalsnes, patrol activity around Namsos, another troop landing point farther north, and said there was "nothing further to report" from Narvik, the northern ore port held by a German garrison.

Prime Minister Chamberlain, meanwhile, conferred with Clement Attlee, leader of the Labor Party, and Arthur Greenwood, deputy leader, to keep them informed on the situation in the north. Parliamentary sources said Chamberlain had decided to defer his statement on the war, which it had been thought he might make tomorrow, until Wednesday or Thursday.

The air ministry announced that in a "recent" action one of its large, unwieldy Sunderland flying boats "shot down" a German Messerschmitt fighting plane and that another Sunderland bombed and sank a German submarine trapped near the Norwegian coast.

Russia Agrees to Ban Resale Of British Goods to Germany

Moscow Accepts London Trade Proposal But Balks at Any Reduction of Own Commerce With Germany; Halifax to Answer

By James B. Reston.

Copyright by New York Times

London, April 29.—Russian Ambassador Maisky called at the Foreign Office today, according to Russian sources, and told Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax that the Soviet Union was willing to make concessions toward a new trade agreement with Great Britain, but emphasized that the Soviet Union reserved the right to sell its own products to Germany or to anybody else.

The Ambassador, who has been trying to reopen trade talks with Britain for the past few weeks, said Russia recognized Britain's right to guard against the possibility that essential war materials should reach the enemy and with this in mind would at least be willing to discuss the question of guaranteeing that no products imported by Russia would be reexported to Germany.

He said, however, that his government would not allow Britain to stipulate in any Anglo-Russian trade agreement what should be done with Russia's own oil, wheat and essential metals.

This stipulation virtually rules out the possibility of any comprehensive war trade agreement. In all her other war trade agreements Britain has insisted that the other country should limit her supplies of war materials to Germany to the quantity sent in a normal year before the war.

For example, when Britain negotiated her trade agreement with Sweden, the Swedes agreed to limit exports of iron ore to 9,500,000 tons—the amount taken by Germany from Sweden in peace time.

Britain and Russia were negotiating a new trade agreement when the Russians invaded Finland. At that time the British had put up a list of goods they were willing to exchange on a barter basis, but just before the war started Viscount Halifax warned Maisky that any aggressive act against the Finns would lead to an immediate cancellation of the talks.

Since the end of the Russo-Finnish war, and especially since the Russians fulfilled their promise to the Finns by allowing the Finnish the Arctic port of Petsamo, the Soviets have been eager to get those talks reopened.

U. S. Must Help Shape Peace, C. of C. Told

Recovery Largely Depends on America, Van Zeeland Says

States, he suggested, to permit repayment of the loans.

Pointing out that the accord of the British and French empires extends to money, he said that, in view of their extent and the volume of raw materials which they produce or control, the influence of a sterling-franc bloc "could easily become a determining factor in the fixing of prices of several of the great commodities enjoying a world market."

This "double money," he declared, might even become more stable than gold. If this were the case, he said, loans for redistribution of gold "might have to be made under better conditions for the borrower."

He did not believe the war would result in the spredaing of communism throughout Europe. That experiment, he said, is at a "dead end" in Russia.

U. S. Leaders Hopeful

An optimistic report on the business outlook was made by spokesmen for different regions of the country at the afternoon session.

They expressed generally the belief that the slight decline in industrial production which has occured since the beginning of the year had run its course, and that better times were ahead.

John W. O'Leary, chairman of the chamber's executive committee, sounded the keynote of the meeting in an opening address at the morning session in which he outlined a program to preserve the "priceless advantages" which the United States has over European nations.

He proposed: Government economy, in order that the budget "may some day be balanced" and taxes "may not kill the goose that laid the golden egg;" improvement of national defense; "restoration of teamwork between employers and employes," and jobs for the unemployed.

Businessmen must unite, he declared, to counteract the efforts of elements in this country who would substitute "collectivism" for free enterprise and representative government.

Sentiment for U. S. Peace

Sentiment was predominantly in favor of keeping out of the war and protecting American economy, so far as possible, from its repercussions.

Those reporting on the regional business outlook appeared in answer to the general question "How's business?"

Walter Harnischfeger, president of the Harnischfeger Corporation, Milwaukee, said "indications are that the decline has about run its course." He said general business in the north central division of the country was better than last year.

He accused the New Deal of holding back business. The 1933 securities act, he said, has deterred the flow of capital into enterprise, and should be modified. He criticized the way in which the Wagner labor act has been administered.

West Is Hopeful

Russell K. Smith, vice president of the Bank of America, San Francisco, said the recession in Western States had been light and that "we feel it has run its course, and that from here on the trend is going to get better." Much depends, he declared, on how the war develops.

Residential building in that section, he declared, is the best it has been in a decade.

Walter D. Fuller, president of the Curtis Publishing Co., Philadelphia, said there had been "a steady and healthy working off of inventories" accumulated by business firms in Pennsylvania last fall, particularly by the steel and steel products industries, and that "best estimates are reserves are again close to normal and slow but steady buying may be looked for in the period ahead." Business in that section, he said, will be affected to a great extent by the war situation.

Lee R. Girton, president of the Girton-Adams Ice Co., Sioux Falls, S. Dak., said business in his section was "fair to good."

Col. T. H. Barton, president of the Lion Oil Refining Co., El Dorado, Ark., said retail trade in his section is above last year in most lines. The South and Southwest, he declared, is "the Nation's No. 1 opportunity," and not the "No. 1 problem," as described in a report some years ago to President Roosevelt.

U. S. Chamber of Commerce Opens 28th Meeting

Businessmen from all sections of the Nation were here for the opening yesterday of the twenty-eighth annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce. Speakers included (left to right) Russell K. Smith, executive vice president of the Bank of America, San Francisco; Porter W. Carswell, president of the Waynesboro (Ga.) Chamber of Commerce; John W. O'Leary, Chicago, chairman of the chamber's executive committee, and Walter D. Fuller, Philadelphia, president of the Curtis Publishing Co.

Don't Get Too Close to Russia, Axis Warning Yugoslavia

Germany and Italy Stress Danger Of Belgrade's Getting Too Chummy With Moscow in Pending Trade Deals

By the Associated Press

Belgrade, April 29.—Germany and Italy are exerting presure on Yugoslavia not to get too chummy with Russia, sources close to the government declared today.

While the Yugoslav foreign office denied categorically Italian and German allegations that anti-German and anti-Italian leaflets had been distributed in Ljubljana, diplomatic sources expressed belief the Axis powers made a fuss over the alleged incident to warn Yugoslavia of the danger of pushing her new friendship with Russia too far.

(Il Giornale d'Italia, influential Fascist newspaper in Rome, published a dispatch from Ljubljana, Yugoslavia, on Friday saying leaflets had been circulated demanding the return to Yugoslavia of Trieste and the coastline of Istria, belonging to Italy, and Carinthia, now a part of Germany.)

A Yugoslav trade delegation now is in Moscow for the first trade accord between Russia and Yugoslavia since the World War.

There is speculation whether the trade agreement will be followed by establishment of full diplomatic relations between the two countries.

Warning Denied

Copyright by New York Times

Belgrade, April 29.—An official denial was given tonight to the report that Yugoslavia had warned Berlin, Budapest and Rome that planes flying over Yugoslav territory would be fired on.

Diplomatic sources, however, confirm that they have been informed that complaints have been made to neighbor states about persistent flights over Yugoslav territory.

Cotton, essential to Yugoslavia's rearmament as well as for her textile industry, is in the foreground of subjects being discussed in Moscow by Yugoslav and Russian trade experts, it is said.

This news has disquieted Allied diplomats here because Anglo-French control of Yugoslavia's cotton supply is one of the Allies' chief economic weapons.

Although British Legation sources see no reason to suspect Yugoslavia of an intention to ship cotton goods to Germany, they realize that assurances are not always the last word in Balkan commercial practice. It is known, for example, that Russian cotton, spun in Bulgaria, is making its way to Germany, though the Bulgarian authoritiesm have repeatedly insisted this would not happen.

In British business circles here, it is said that Germany is getting a long start in purchasing agricultural products, through lack of drive in British commercial policy. Many cases are known when German merchants have bought up large quantities of vitally important food stuff because of British hesitation about prices.

Pact Signed to Define Soviet-Finnish Border

Moscow, April 29 (AP).—A protocol defining the Russian-Finnish frontier was signed today by Premier-Foreign Commissar Vyacheslaff Molotoff and Finnish Minister Juho Kusti Paasikivi in conformity with the peace treaty of March 12.

Unions 'Profit' From Chains, Official Says

Locher Joins Farm Aides and Professor In Opposition to Tax

John Locher, president of the Central Labor Union of Washington, yesterday joined a college professor and farmer spokesmen in opposing the Patman bill to tax chain stores before a House Ways and Means subcommittee.

"Our opposition to putting the large chain store operators out of business or splitting them or paralyzing their growth," he declared, "is based on the simple fact that our affiliated unions, including the building trades, enjoy good relations with the large chain operators . . .

"They have paid a great many millions of dollars in wages to a great many thousand union men here in the last ten years, at the prevailing rates and hours, and other conditions. We have profited from their growth. Our members will lose much work if they are destroyed or their growth is stopped."

Joseph M. Klamon, professor of commerce at Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., said the graduated tax proposed in Patman's bill would "foster monopoly by protecting the competition in business against new methods which perform the same functions more efficiently." The tax would also, he held, "subsidize the marginal retailers and other less effective retail distributors at the consumer's expense."

Farm representatives who opposed the measure were M. J. Duer, Exmont, Va., grower and shipper; H. G. Marquart, of Orchard Park, N. Y., president of the New York Vegetable Growers Association, and John Christensen, of Wilson, Conn., chairman of the Connecticut Marketing Authority. All contended the chains, through effective advertising and merchandising, had increased consumption of fruits and vegetables.

I. J. Collins, Lancaster, Ohio, glassware manufacturer, said chain stores handled about 75 per cent of his output.

Overtime Wage Change Voted

to have an important meeting today, and they wanted to be on hand when the conference report on the 1941 agriculture appropriation comes up on the House floor.

But it was thought by some observers that at least a contributing factor might be that the farm bloc is seriously in need in need of urban votes to insure House acceptance of the $212,000,000 added by the Senate for parity payments in the agriculture appropriation bill, to say nothing of $50,000,000 for farm tenancy loans and $85,000,000 for surplus commodity disposal.

To help win over the necessary industrial votes for farm parity, a considerable number of the more New Dealish farm representatives are willing to join their city colleagues in voting against the extensive wage-hour law exemptions contained in the Barden bill. Once the Barden amendments—or the larger part of them—are defeated, the farmers feel they will have a better chance of collecting a few crucial urban votes for parity.

However, Representative Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, one of the chief proponents of the Barden bill, declared last night that "in my judgment, most of the Barden amendments will pass the House." He added that "we can afford to lose a few farm votes."

Even if the Barden amendments are turned down, it seemed likely last night that the House might adopt, as a minimum, the milder wage-hour exemptions contained in the bill proposed by Chairman Norton of the Labor Committee.

In any case, many members of the House predict that whatever the House passes this session will be quietly done to death in the Labor Committee of the Senate.

Traffic Deaths Increase in U. S.

Chicago, April 29 (AP).—An "alarming" increase in traffic deaths brought a warning to American motorists today to "apply the brakes."

The National Safety Council reported that 7,200 persons were killed in motor vehicle accidents in the United States during the first quarter of 1940—450, or 7 per cent, more than in the same period in 1939.

Truck Strike Laid to Row On Jurisdiction

Teamsters and Engineers Squabbled on Control, Witnesses Testify

At least one strike on Government construction here was blamed by District Court witnesses yesterday on a dispute over whether drivers of concrete mixing trucks should pay dues to the A. F. of L. Teamsters' Union or the A. F. of L. Operating Engineers' Union.

The testimony was offered against the teamsters' union and five of its officials, who are on trial before Justice F. Dickinson Letts for violating the anti-trust laws forbidding combinations in restraint of trade.

The teamsters' union claimed jurisdiction over chauffeurs, truck drivers and the like. The operating engineers claim jurisdiction over workers who run building machinery. The unions clashed over the right to organize the drivers of trucks which have concrete mixers mounted on them, which mix concrete while they are delivering it.

Flanaghan Testifies

T. M. Flanaghan, president of T. M. Flanaghan Contracting Co., said the teamsters called a strike of his dump wagon drivers, when he was working on a steam tunnel connecting the central heating plant and the new Social Security Building. Flanaghan and his construction superintendent, Peter Ellis, testified that this was done because he was receiving concrete from mixing trucks belonging to Howat Concrete Co., which were driven by members of the operating engineers.

Ellis said two of the defendants—Stuart M. Kayser, teamster business agent, and Linwood A. Trainham, local secretary-treasurer—told him the strike would continue as long as he received concrete from mixing trucks driven by members of the rival union.

Flanaghan said the strike cost him between $3,000 and $10,000. He identified a document offered by Special Assistant Attorney General Walter R. Hutchinson as a contract, which he refused to sign, binding him to refuse to accept concrete from trucks driven by operating engineer members.

Shields on Stand

John Shields, agent of the engineers local, testified yesterday that an A. F. of L. committee refused to settle the jurisdictional dispute in Washington because it had been decided in another case. Joseph A. Padway, A. F. of L. general counsel and defense attorney, claims the award was in favor of the teamsters and that strikes to enforce this award were justified.

Other witnesses yesterday were Matthew H. McCloskey, president of McCloskey & Co., and J. J. Buckley, president of Buckley & Co.

Besides Trainham and Keyser, the defendants are Local 639 of the teamsters union, Charles J. Bell, local president, Thomas O'Brien, Philadelphia, business agent, and Aubrew W. Stream, business agent.

Board Indorses Measure Aimed At 'Baby Brokers'

Purposes of proposed legislation drafted by the Council of Social Agencies to require the licensing of persons or agencies placing children in foster homes were indorsed yesterday by the Board of Public Welfare.

The council's suggested bill, aimed at so-called "baby brokers," won general approval of the welfare group, but it was suggested the measure also should include provisions for licensing those who care for the children.

"However," a statement from Welfare Director Robert E. Bondy said, "the board regrets the draft has come to it so late in the session of Congress that the customary procedures of consideration by the Commissioners, the corporation counsel and the Bureau of the Budget and committees in Congress seem to preclude action at this session."

Bondy added that the Welfare Board would take immediate steps to confer with interested individuals and organizations "in the interest of having the proposed legislation ready for the next session of Congress."

U. S. Investigates Scalise Taxes

New York, April 29 (AP).—Already facing a possible sentence of 1,500 years for alleged extortion, George Scalise, 44, former president of the Building Service Employees International Union (A. F. L.) became the subject of a Federal income tax investigation today.

Investigators were looking into the reported payment of $18,000 to Scalise by a physician who treated union patients.

Scalise was indicted last week on 32 counts for extortion of nearly $100,000 from building operators and union employes. He resigned as union head after being indicted.

G. W. Law Student Sworn In As Home-Town Peace Justice

ROY LEVER

From collegiate politics to the real thing was but a simple step for Roy Lever, 23-year-old George Washington University law school student, and newest justice of the peace of Neptune Township, N. J.

Lever, who will receive his LL.B. degree at the local school in June, 1941, was sworn in Saturday when he left his studies long enough to spend the week-end in his home town, Ocean Grove, N. J.

Winning the Republican nomination last September when friends conducted an intensive write-in campaign, he was elected in November.

Because the township has five justices of the peace and only 20,000 residents, the student justice will be able to continue his studies and take up his duties during summer vacation.

On graduation Lever expects to practice law in Ocean Grove, a summer resort town near Asbury Park. He entered law school in 1938.

Former president of Kappa Sigma, campus social fraternity, he has been president of the Interfraternity Council and Gate and Key, organization for outstanding fraternity men.

For his work as president of the Rousers, cheer-leading group, he received a citation from Omicron Delta Kappa, honorary activities fraternity.

Last year he was included in Who's Who in American Colleges.

Trade Groups Told Agencies Need Overseer

Government's Growth Calls for Regulation, G. W. Professor Says

Growth of administrative agencies in the Federal Government has made necessary the enactment of such legislation as is proposed by the Logan-Walter bill, J. Forrester Davison, associate professor of law at George Washington University, said yesterday.

He addressed a group of more than 200 attending the semiannual meeting of the American Trade Association Executives at the Mayflower Hotel on "The Administrative Process and the Regulating of Regulators."

Interference of agencies with individual business activity has increased greatly, Davison said.

Award Presented

The eighth American Trade Association Executives' award for "outstanding trade association achievement" went to the Douglas Fir Plywood Association, of Takoma, Wash., for "an exceptionally well-rounded program and carrying it through during 1938-39 in a sustained and highly successful manner."

Edward J. Noble, Undersecretary of Commerce, made the presentation to Philip Garland, president of the association. The Takoma organization was cited by Noble for giving assistance to its members in 14 fields.

Honorable mention certificates were presented to the Anthracite Industries, Inc., of New York; the Association of American Railroads; the Durene Association of America, New York; the Institute of Distribution, New York; the National Association of Broadcasters; the National Association of Retail Grocers; the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association, and the Institute of American Meat Packers.

Ray Tucker Speaks

The next President of the United States will be elected on a 'keep us out of war' platform, and will end up by having us in the war in the following few months," Ray Tucker, McClure Syndicate writer, told the groups.

At the morning session, Dr. John R Steelman, director of the Department of Labor conciliation service, discussed the work of that organization. Dr. Theodore J. Kreps, economic adviser of the Temporary National Economic Committee, spoke on the possibilities of wider distribution and the economic adjustments necessary to such a move.

Buckingham, U. S. Physicist, Is Dead at 72

One-Time Attache In Rome Stricken At Home Saturday

Edgar Buckingham, 72, Government physicist, college professor and former attache in Rome, died last night at Garfield Hospital.

Stricken Saturday night at his home in Chevy Chase, he was taken to the hospital. His son, Stephen Alvord Buckingham, and daughter, Mrs. Katherine Hunt, arrived here Sunday from their homes in Boston.

Studied at Strassbourg

A native of Philadelphia, he was graduated from Harvard, receiving degree of batchelor of arts in 1887. He completed two years of graduate work at Harvard, then attended the University of Strassbourg and received a degree of doctor of philosophy there in 1890. He then taught for a year at the University of Leipsiz, Germany.

Before coming to Washington in 1902 as an assistant physicist in the Agriculture Department Bureau of Soils, he taught at Harvard, Bryn Mawr College and the University of Wisconsin. From 1905 to 1937, when he retired, he worked as a physicist in the Bureau of Standards.

Taught at Naval Academy

In 1918 he served as associate scientific attache in the United States Embassy at Rome. A two-year leave of absence from 1910 to 1912 allowed him to teach thermodynamics at the Naval Academy.

Mr. Buckingham was president of the Philosophical Society of Washington in 1915, and a member of the American Society of Naval Engineers and the Acoustical Society of America. He belonged to the Cosmos and Harvard Clubs.

Burial will be in Fort Lincoln Cemetery, Bladensburg road and the District line, at a time to be announced.

Besides his son and daughter, a sister, Miss Mary Buckingham, of Boston, survives.

Getting Together

The topics listed for discussion at the annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce, now in session here, strikingly reveal the catholicity of interest among the membership. People frequently forget that the word "business" covers a vast number of heterogeneous activities and that businessmen are individuals with very different backgrounds and aptitudes, often aiming at conflicting objectives.

When it is said, therefore, that gatherings like that of the Chamber of Commerce afford businessmen opportunity for expressing their opinion on national policies, a false impression of unanimity is apt to be created. Undoubtedly those engaged in business are deeply interested in the effect of government regulatory policies upon private enterprise, and in problems of taxation and employer-employe relationships. But it is only in this somewhat limited field that the representatives of business are likely to achieve a large measure of agreement as to what should or should not be done.

It is not merely in the exchange of views on these matters of mutual concern, but also in the opportunity to get in touch with members of Congress and public officials that the chief value of the annual meetings is found The give-and-take of informal conversations, and the organized discussions of round-table groups, leave a more lasting impression than formal addresses, however interesting and illuminating. For a set speech necessarily reflects one man's point of view and at best only serves as a guide for subsequent discussion.

An undue amount of publicity has been given in the past to Chamber of Commerce addresses sharply critical of Administration policies. While honest criticism should always be encouraged, its effectiveness is increased when it is offered in a way that invites a sympathetic response from those in control of policy.

Judging from the varied program before the current gathering, the businessmen in attendance are not here merely to express their minds about affairs of state, but to give and receive information that will enable them to relate their special problems to the larger issues of general concern.

Uniformity Of Policy

As the European war has spread, the task of enforcing the Neutrality Act and the regulations arising out of it has grown in size and complexity. The creation in the Department of Justice of a new unit with responsibility for control of all prosecutive action arising from violations of this complicated legislation is thus in the interest of efficiency.

The establishment of this unit does not reduce or eliminate the statutory responsibility already vested in various departments of the Government for the fulfillment of particular sections of the Neutrality Act and related laws.

The Munitions Control Board will continue, as heretofore, to exercise its supervisory function over the traffic in arms, munitions and implements of war, a duty which is being performed in a most conscientious and efficient manner. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, to cite another instance, will in the future, as in the past, be charged with the responsibility of investigating violations of Federal laws relating to this country's status as a neutral.

The principal purpose behind the creation of the Neutrality Laws Unit will be to assure uniformity of policy with respect to prosecution of offenses. That uniformity has heretofore been lacking. Prosecutions have sometimes been initiated by Federal attorneys without reference to actions taken elsewhere. The neutrality unit will not handle prosecution of cases itself but will control Department of Justice policy in cases falling within its purview and will maintain active supervision to expedite the progress of cases. It will also maintain active contact with the various Government departments in matters affecting the neutrality laws.

In times of great emotional strain there is danger that overzealous prosecutors will, in the name of law enforcement, overstep the mark and do violence to civil liberties. It is encouraging, therefore, that the new unit in the Department of Justice is pledged in advance to follow the straight and narrow line and scrutinize each case "with reference both to adequate protection of the national interest and the civil rights of individuals involved."

The Buyer's Privilege

About a year ago the District Court of Appeals issued an injunction, at the behest of seven steel companies, which prevented the Government from putting into effect the minimum wage schedules established by the Secretary of Labor as applicable to Government contracts under the Walsh-Healey Act.

The Supreme Court yesterday upset that injunction on the ground that the companies had no standing in the courts because their legal rights had not been invaded. The Walsh-Healey Act, as the court pointed out, "does not represent an exercise by Congress of regulatory power over private business or employment." It simply states the conditions under which the Government will do business with private concerns.

Under that law the Secretary of Labor is directed to ascertain minimum wages prevailing in the locality in various industries or groups of industries. Thereafter payment of such minimum wage rates is required on all work performed for the Government by local concerns.

The protesting steel companies maintain that the Secretary of Labor has disregarded long-established wage differentials in setting up a minimum wage rate for an extensive area embracing a large number of States. They further complain that the effect of the ruling is to handicap them in competition with larger companies, and also to force an increase in wage payments on non-Government contracts. The decision of the Supreme Court throws no light on the merits of these claims because it holds that the ruling of the Secretary is not subject to review.

The decision unquestionably will mean that the Secretary of Labor can exercise very important powers of control over the wage rates paid by concerns engaged on Government work. However, that official is, as the court says, responsible to "superior executive and legislative authority." If Congress wishes to limit or redefine the law governing public contracts it can do so.

The Supreme Court reminds the lower court that judicial interference "with the performance of the ordinary duties of the executive departments of the Government would be productive of nothing but mischief."

There is here no question of administrative usurpation of powers not conferred by law, or of invasion of private rights which would entitle the aggrieved persons to appeal to the courts for relief. The Government clearly has the right to set terms on which it will buy. And if they are unacceptable, private concerns may refuse to deal. That is the sum and substance of the Court's argument, and it appears to rest on solid grounds.

Roots Of Democracy

There are few more promising signs of vitality in a democratic system than the organization of citizens into local groups for the promotion of good government. The type of legislator sent to Washington is determined in large measure by the type of local regime to be found in cities and counties throughout the country. So long as these "grass roots" of democracy are thriving there need be little fear of national disintegration from within.

As an indication of the constructive forces now at work in various cities, a glance at the Huntington Good Government Association will be enlightening. This bipartisan agency was set up in 1936 in an effort to bring about more satisfactory municipal government in Huntington, W. Va. Its first striking success came in 1938 when 20 out of 26 candidates it had indorsed for the city council were elected. It is now campaigning for the nomination of well qualified candidates for both city and Cabell County offices in the May primaries.

The Good Government Association is controlled by 44 directors representing in even numbers the Democratic and Republican parties. Whenever it indorses candidates for office, it approves both a Republican and a Democrat. If both are nominated in the primary, the G. G. A. takes no further action. If only one of the candidates thus designated is nominated for any office, that individual has the support of the G. G. A. in the election campaign regardless of what his politics may be.

In this way the association is able to persuade better qualified public servants to seek office and to rally public support for such men in spite of machine politics. Political bosses find it difficult to fight such a movement. When once an independent group of citizens has demonstrated its appeal to the electorate the bosses are more likely to fall into line than to resist.

Voteless Washington cannot follow in the footsteps of cities which are thus putting their houses in order through the election of high caliber public servants. But it is perhaps in greater need of a good government association than any other American city. For, in spite of its many organizations interested in civic affairs, the city has no united voice with which to demand more efficient and representative government. How long will it take for civic Washington to learn that in unity there is strength?

Alfieri To Berlin

When Dino Alfieri was deprived of his job as Italian minister of propaganda last September, in a shake-up which also saw the elimination of Achille Starace as secretary of the Fascist Party, this "change of the guard" was widely interpreted as a sign of a weakening in the Berlin-Rome axis. The two men had long been regarded as among the most ardent pro-Nazis in Rome, Alfieri, for his part, having been at least partly responsible for anti-Semitic measures decreed by the Fascist government in imitation of the Nuremberg laws.

When Alfieri left the government it could not be denied that, despite the German-Italian alliance, Germany had gone to war without the aid and even against the advice of her Italian partner. For there is now available abundant evidence that Italy did everything possible to urge Hitler to refrain from conflict. And one of the individuals who was most active in this peace effort during the critical days of last August was Bernardo Attolico, since 1935 Italy's Ambassador to Germany.

It is thus of more than passing significance that Mussolini has now seen fit to replace Attolico by Alfieri. This can only be interpreted as a sign that Italy is again ready to pursue an axis policy for it comes at a time when one Fascist spokesman after another has been emphasizing Italy's readiness and willingness to fight. In the meantime the Fascist press has been unceasing in its clamor against the Allies and unsparing in its emphasis on real or alleged German successes in Norway and elsewhere.

This does not necessarily mean that Italy is now preparing to slide into the war on Germany's side. However desirable such a course might seem from the viewpoint of Italy's imperial ambitions the risks involved would be considerable. It does suggest, however, that whatever weakening in the axis occurred after the outbreak of the war has now been overcome and that the totalitarian partners are again considering the wisdom and advantages of joint action.

Certainly with Alfieri in Berlin the Italian government will hardly be the recipient of reports critical to the Nazi regime.

On The Grass, Alas

Human nature is often devious, but never in sober locomotion. Then men—and women—tend to follow the straight and narrow path. To this there can ordinarily be no objection. But the results are sometimes distressing as, for instance, when individuals make ugly cow paths across beautiful lawns and malls in order to illustrate Euclid's dictum that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points.

It is against this practice that the Office of National Capital Parks has just issued a tearful protest. "We don't mind anyone walking on the grass for a stroll, or to feed the squirrels or to eat lunch under a tree or to lie down for a nap," say the park officials, "but when persons who are not out to enjoy the grass but merely to get from one place to another as fast as possible keep tramping across the grass in one spot, something must be done to protect the investment the public has made in the planting and upkeep of the grass."

This is sound logic if slightly unutilitarian. But the National Capital Parks officials are not letting it go with admonitions alone. Grass-covered downtown park areas are now being patrolled and warnings will be handed out to violators of the official order not to take short cuts.

We are with them on that. But in view of the human urge to save a minute which cannot be used for any conceivable purpose except to be wasted, we wonder whether anything short of a barbed wire fence will be adequate. For, again reverting to Euclid, human beings hate to go around two sides of a triangle when there is a chance to use the hypothenuse.

We View With Alarm

From the Richmond Times-Dispatch

Oh-oh! This looks bad.

A Randolph-Macon sophomore has challenged the claim of a Fresno college student to the hitch-hiking speed record. It seems that the Californian, by thumbing his way from Fresno to Salt Lake City, made an average of 19.8 miles per hour for the 851 miles, affirming that this was probably tops for mendicant travel. The Randolph-Macon lad counters with the assertion that he made a 1,589-mile round trip between Richmond and Montgomery, Ala., at an average speed of 23.1 miles per hour.

Hitherto, competition among hitch-hikers has been for transportation alone. Now the element of contest for a record enters. This is ominous. It was thus that the marathon dance madness started, the tree-sitting mania, and the goldfish-gulping aberration.

There is no intention here to deplore the practice of thumbing rides. That has been deplored by experts and without noticeable effect. But, please, boys, please, let's let this speed record matter drop. The possibilities are too fearful to set forth in detail. Let's just skip it. Isn't the most accomplished prevaricator going to win, in the end, anyway.

Sweden's Role

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A letter signed John A. Clark, Minneapolis, Minn., April 12, appeared in your paper.

Apparently Mr. Clark has never been in either Finland or Sweden, so I would like to set him straight, as to the attitude of Sweden, during the recent assault on Finland.

Stockholm is about one and one-half hours (flying time) from Leningrad, and has been continuously threatened by Russia's ally, Hitler. Notwithstanding this, Sweden contributed more than $4,000,000 in money, in addition to one day's pay each week from all workingmen. Thousands of her citizens volunteered for service with the Finnish army, and all refugees coming on her shores were fed, clothed, housed and rendered medical attention.

Certainly these and other facts which have been published in your valuable paper would indicate to those who will read them, everything to the contrary of the statement of Mr. Clark, that Sweden sold the Finns down the river.

Sweden has never sold out any country. Her record for more than 100 years for peace and good government is one that it would be well for others to follow.

In America we have a great President whose sincerity no one can question, who, having all the facts, is steering us along lines to preserve real neutrality, and it would be well for all to lend a hand to make his efforts a success.

Not A Horse

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Speaking of iron heels, the Nazis have nothing on our Washington girls.

That noise one hears outside one's door of mornings is not a horse coming home from the blacksmith's, or a strong man laying an oak floor. It is a sylph-like young lady tripping toward the elevator. I have looked out and seen it.

Opiate Of Optimism

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Just as surely as the beginnings of democracy in the Old World foreshadowed its appearance in the New World, its complete destruction in the Old World must foreshadow its complete destruction in the New World. Once the Old World becomes totally totalitarian, freedom in the New World, which in its entirety is but about 15 per cent of the earth (in population, as in area) must tremble to its very foundations, knowing that it is surely doomed.

While most minds turn from such pessimistic common sense as they turn from thoughts about death itself, let us realize that, as someone has said, eternal optimism is mental laziness. If the Crucified One saw fit to weep for all mankind, and to warn that the time would come when men's hearts would fail them for fear as they saw the things that would take shape upon the earth, then surely we are deluding ourselves exceedingly if we think ourselves free from dangers of the profoundest sort and degree.

For many years, optimism has been a sort of fashion in America. Many have so feared to go against this fashion that they have coupled with all their warnings the pleasant thought that in the end, the dictatorships must pass, and freedom, so loved by every heart, live on.

But there is greatest mischief in this overused half-true thought. What is better calculated to lull us into inertia? What is there in this opiate to fit us for the action which this very hour demands? Is there, or is there not, life in our love of liberty?

The Auto-Lien Racket

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read your editorial in The Post of April 25 entitled "Protecting a Racket" and in fairness to all concerned, I would like to clear up certain matters of opinion expressed therein.

You state that liens against automobiles are recorded, if at all, with the recorder of deeds, and that a purchaser must hire a lawyer to search the records. Then you state that the exorbitant fees fixed by Congress to discourage the filing of liens.

It is no more necessary to hire a lawyer for this purpose than it is necessary to do so for the purpose of obtaining title or other information from the Department of Vehicles. In the office of the recorder of deeds, courteous employes will direct anyone to the record room where a complete alphabetical index is kept, and the employes there will gladly check the record for anyone who is unable to do so for any reason. As for the fees, the sum of $1.50 is not exorbitant; however, if it is, Congress can easily reduce same.

Then you say: "Almost every day some motorist discovers that an automobile which he has purchased in good faith has been taken from him because of a hidden lien of which he had no knowledge."

I refer you to Title 25, Sections 177 and 179 of the District of Columbia Code, as well as to an article which I wrote entitled "Validity and Effect of Unrecorded Conditional Sales Contract," which appeared in the Bar Association Journal of June, 1938 (Vol. V, page 285). These sections of the code protect "third persons acquiring title to property" if the conditional sales contract is not recorded, and render a mortgage or deed of trust void as to third persons without notice unless recorded, so that an automobile cannot be taken from an innocent purchaser, where the lien is unrecorded.

The racket exists because finance companies make a charge of $1.50 for recording and then keep the fee without recording the paper. Congress could avoid this by making recordation mandatory.

Honesty And Fairness

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial apparently intended to comfort the Churchill sympathizers would be funny were it not that it involves such an important matter in world affairs—you surely don't hesitate to insult your readers' intelligence, sir! Is your sheet becoming part of the Allied propaganda effort in America?

While hurling assorted charges at Germany for anticipating England's Churchill in his efforts to block off German vessels by mine-laying, you carefully avoid mentioning this little matter which precipitated the Norwegian struggle. Why not just a little bit of honesty and fairness in your editorial comment. Isn't there such a thing as integrity in journalism as there is in science?

Between your editorials and your galaxy of commentators, this sheet of yours begins to take on the appearance of an Allied propaganda pamphlet, begging America again to help make Britain the boss of Europe—the Britain which has tried for months to gang up with Red Russia and is still trying to.

Congress Supports Its Library

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On your editorial page of April 27 you reprint an editorial from the Hartford Courant on the Congressional Library. The interest of the Hartford Courant in the Library of Congress is deeply appreciated, and writers and teachers as well as librarians will be grateful to the Courant's eloquent reminder that a "library is an important part of every republic, both in its preservation of the nation's literary traditions and as the laboratory for future scholars." Citizens in general will also agree that American legislators have often found it was easier to economize at the cost of books and art and education than at the cost of more highly publicized but less important matters.

But in fairness to this year's House and Senate Appropriation Committees, it should be said that Congressional treatment of Library of Congress appropriations was not of this nature. It is true that the library was not granted the total increase in appropriations estimated by the librarian as necessary. The increase estimated as necessary was $1,081,521, whereas the increase allowed by the House was $340,791, to which amount the Senate added $88,300.

But this increase, though less than the amount estimated as necessary, was the largest ever allowed the library in any single year. And the library fared much better than most other agencies. Appropriations for all Government agencies taken together were reduced by about 8 per cent under 1940; appropriations for the Library of Congress were increased about 10 per cent over 1940.

Furthermore, the report of the House subcommittee on the legislative bill of which Representative Louis C. Rabaut was chairman specifically stated that the subcommittee did not wish to be understood to discourage the proposals submitted by the librarian, but felt under the exceptional circumstances of the present year that only the most essential increases should be permitted at this time.

It should be added that the most serious disappointment suffered by the library this year—its failure to raise the distressingly low salaries of the staff—was the result not of action of the subcommittee directed toward the library specifically, but of a broad ruling adopted on economy grounds by the full Committee on Appropriation and aimed at all agencies. The subcommittee dealing with the library appropriations invited a reclassification by the Civil Service Commission of the entire library staff with a view to ameliorating existing conditions.

Congress and Congressional committees are so rarely credited with conscientiousness in the public interest which they so commonly show that it seems to me important to call attention to this year's hearings and reports on the library's appropriations. These documents should persuade their readers that members of the Senate and House charged with the duty of providing for the great library which is so essential to the entire world of American learning have studied its needs, are aware of its problems and can be counted on to further its purposes.

The Post Impressionist

Griffin's Galaxy

About ten years ago when I had taken out my indentures as a freight clerk with a steamship company I found myself working with more story-tellers then I'd ever met before in one place outside an O'Brien anthology. There wasn't a man on the payroll from trucker to chief clerk who couldn't have started for Canterbury in the morning and held his own with the glib-best reeves and millers Chaucer or anyone else could have dug up. Nearly all of the stories I heard would have had the Canterbury pilgrims begging for more. I remember most of them now even though I've forgotten the names of their inventors.

The only tale-spinner whose name I do recall happened to be the most inept fabricator of the lot. His name was Griffin, and in his hands even that De Maupassant story about the necklace that turned out to be paste would have fallen to pieces.

All Griffin's stories were true, and dimensions were an integral part of every story he told. If the story weren't true, or if there weren't something like a stick of wood nine inches long or a wall of solid rock a foot and a half thick somewhere in the background, then Griffin rejected it. It remained an untold tale.

That isn't why I remember him though. I remember him because the people who breathed, moved, and had their being in the sterile world that Griffin's passion for truth and his love of measurement created had such astonishing names. A list of the people who fluttered through the Griffin stories would read like a Who's Who of the literature of tomorrow. Dickens would have given his right arm to have heard of one of them.

I used to listen to Griffin's stories just for the excitement of the moment when he pushed a new character on the stage. "So my cousin went out to the loan shark's——" One of his stories started that way. I don't recall how often I heard it, but each time I'd stop him right there and ask: "What cousin was that, Grif?" The answer was always the same: "E. W. Lockinridge."

I've forgotten what happened to cousin at the loan shark's, but whenever I hear that someone has fallen into the clutches of a Shylock I'm a little surprised to hear his name isn't E. W. Lockinridge, just as I'd feel cheated at discovering that a crippled ragamuffin who was facing what looked like a bleak Christmas wasn't called Tiny Tim.

The story of Griffin's appendectomy is probably as grim a tale as ever came out of the ether of an operating room. I don't remember. All I recall is that the surgeon who performed the operation—he had a scar on his right check that was all of an inch wide—was Doctor Barne Dexter. Not Doctor Jennings, or Doctor Price, or any of the other surgeons who would have attended an ordinary mortal with as much skill as their subdued cognomens allowed—but Doctor Barne Dexter, complete with scar.

George Slyby was the man behind the cash-register in Griffin's epic of a frustrated hold-up. Saunders Coombe was the deckhand on a freighter who rescued a fox terrier from a watery grave. Mason Mix was the undertaker who refused to pay Griffin for two tickets to a firemen's ball. Harris O'Hare had a brief bit in a drama involving a wedding ring lost on a subway car. (Harris was standing six feet away from the man who found it.)

All Griffin's stories were like that. You could never be sure of the structure of the story, except to be sure it would collapse; but you could always count on the dramatis personae. The cast of characters always promised more in the way of excitment than anyone—amateur or professional—has been able to stuff into a list of names since Dion Boucicault laid down his pen.

Naturally, I believe the man never lived who'd been called E. W. Lockinridge or Arlington Pugh (a fellow, who turned in the alarm in one of the dreariest accounts of a fire I've ever listened to) or any of the rest of the bizarre names that tripped so lightly from Griffin's tongue. There was a liar struggling for existence in the painfully truthful soul of Griffin: I was convinced of that. And I was sure it found the breath of life in the bright, clear air of fancy that Griffin reached in those sporadic flights from which he returned with such matchless inventions as the names he wasted on his undeserving and disappointing heroes.

I kept thinking that until I ran head-on into evidence that made me think I was wrong. Shortly before I left the steamship company I was with Griffin when he met two of his friends. He and I were drinking coffee in a restaurant near the steamship wharf when these two came in to buy cigarettes. They both spoke to him.

"Hi, Grif."

"Hello, Bonfey," Griffin answered. "Hi, Mike."

I'd never seen either of them before. "Who are those fellows, Grif?" I asked him after they had left the restaurant.

"A couple of guys used to work with me when I was car-knocking on the D. L. & W. They're deck hands on the boat now. Signed on last trip."

That was not what I wanted to know. If they'd ever worked with Griffin I knew they could have been anything from car-knockers to horse-traders. I was interested in something else.

"What are their names?"

"Oh." Griffin lost interest. He'd imagined I wanted to hear a story about the D. L. & W. He tossed me the names like a child handing over an apple core to a friend. "Boney Lyons," he said, "and Mike Kraft."

Two weeks later when he told me a story about a chiropodist called Trueby Shell I was willing to believe that Trueby Shell was the chiropodist's name.

Fill-In On Scalise

THIS WILL BE one more fillin on George Scalise, the labor racketeer, after which these dispatches will let him stew in his own juice for a while.

It has been shown that the official list of the Building Service Employees' International Union, of which he became president by the process of musceling in, is loaded with ex-convicts and that the bosom friend of Scalise during the time he was rehabilitating himself through altruistic service to the toilers at $20,000 a year and unlimited expenses was Little Augie Carfano, alias Pisano, alias Little Aug, a well-known gunman and a conspicuous bubble in the criminal scum which drifts to the Miamis in the winter and to Saratoga in the summer. Litle Aug was a close companion of Scalise during the time that William Green's distinguished colleague was organizing the car washers' and garage hands' racket in Brooklyn, which was known as an ice-pick or razor-blade union because it was noticed that the tires or cars which were parked in nonunion garages came down of ice-pick punctures in their tires and razor slashes in their upholstery.

Against this background consider now an announcement published on page 14 of the Building Service Employee, the official publication of the union, in the issue of Jaunary last.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT said that the union had now acquired its own detective agency, "namely, Special Officers and Guards Union Service, Inc.; license No. 3256," as a subsidiary of the Special Officers and Guards Local No. 177. The possibilities for crime should not need detailed explanation when it is considered that this agency was to occupy a status subordinate to the international under the presidency of Mr. Scalise.

Building service employes include not only bellhops and chambermaids who might have access to the papers and possessions of hotel guests, but the guards and doormen of apartment buildings, who can exclude or admit unauthorized persons above stairs, who have access to the pass keys of apartments and who are in a position to know when tenants are home and when they are out. The purposes of the detective agency are not announced in the Building Service Employee, but the avowed purposes are unimportant by comparison with the possibilities which would suggest themselves to the lively imagination of those executives who prepared themselves for the labor movement in various prisons.

The Building Service Employee, published at the expense of the union members, most of whom muscled into the fold and none of whom ever cast a vote on the presidency, is nominally a members' journal, but actually a horn for the personal ballyhoo of Mr. Scalise and a few subordinate officers. Mr. Scalise's picture adorns the editorial page, with a message from him to those who, willingly or otherwise, were paying his salary and expenses but the new spirit bubbled up in a beautiful extra tribute to that man whom, that God-sent leader of the underprivileged, Mr. George Scalise under the signature of Mr. George Cammarata, secretary-treasurer of Local 52-E.

THESE DISPATCHES regret to say that they have no background on Mr. Cammarata, and, not knowing how he came into the labor movement or anything about his previous activities, cannot suggest whether he was being naive or what in writing as follows:

"It is a pleasure as well as a privilege to devote part of this page to our parent body and to our general president, Mr. George Scalise. There are few locals which take time enough off to tell the membership anything about their governing bodies and the men who are directly responsible for the strength and solidarity of their unions. Probably the reason why some of the officers of the locals don't take time off to talk about their parent bodies is because they are ashamed of the men who are at the head. But we are particularly proud of our general president, Mr. George Scalise. He is a grand person and a militant leader. We are especially proud to have him as a member of our local. That is an honor no one can take away from us. We consider ourselves lucky to have such a man as Mr. Scalise as head of our international, because he is a darned good man for the job and a swell guy."

In a few days these dispatches will return to the subject of labor with a capital L as governed by the racketeers of the A. F. of L. and the Communists of the C. I. O. But in the meantime it is the hope of your correspondent to throw a change of pace.

PRESIDENT QUEZON
If a proposed amendment to the Philippine constitution goes through he may be given a second term, according to an article by Vicente Albano Pacis on this page

Quezon On Top

By Vicente Albano Pacis

Special Correspondent of The Post

Manila.

ALL THE PROLONGED efforts which have been made to amend the Philippine constitution may have no more definite and sure result than the re-election of Manuel L. Quezon as president for a new term of at least two years in addition to the six-year term which he will have completed in 1941.

The National Assembly, wholly made up of men belonging to the ruling party, which proposes amendments to be voted upon at a popular plebiscite subject to final approval or disapproval by the President of the United States, has adopted four separate amendments. These are an amendment shortening the presidential term from six to four years but allowing one reelection, whereas under the present constitution reelection is prohibited; an amendment creating an electoral commission to administer the election laws and hear election protests; an amendment abolishing the unicameral legislature and replacing it with a congress consisting of a house and senate; and an amendment increasing the salary of legislators from 5,000 pesos a year, as now provided, to 7,200 pesos.

STRONG opposition to the salary increase is developing. The senate project is mildly popular; the electoral commission plan is regarded with indifference, but the presidential reelection is being openly interpreted as intended to reelect President Quezon and is sure of an overwhelming approval.

Since the electoral commission is not even being discussed, its approval or disapproval will not make much difference. The presidential reelection plan, however, is considered popular and is definitely regarded even by its proponents as tantamount to a move to reelect Quezon.

Every forecast points to the rejection of the senate salary amendments, the indifferent acceptance of the electoral commission, and the overwhelming approval of the reelection amendment. If this is the case, President Quezon will be as good as nominated for reelection—and as good as reelected. In justice to President Quezon, it should be said that he has repeatedly announced that he will not consent to be a candidate to succeed himself.

BE THAT AS it may, even before the plebiscite which will take place in June all the presidential booms known, except that of the President, seem to have exploded. With the plebiscite result as expected, no new boom could possibly develop again. The boom for Sergio Osmena, the vice president, was the strongest until about a month ago, when the campaign for the amendments definitely stressed the reelection issue, presenting President Quezon as its first beneficiary. That of Manuel Roxas, the secretary of finance, appears to have had a similar upset for exactly the same reason. And that of the speaker, Jose Yulo, had apparently been exploded even earlier, probably due to his closer relations with the President and his closer contact with public opinion.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The American Panacea

IT USED to be said of American legislators that when something went wrong they immediately passed a new law forbidding the evil to exist. The question of enforcement did not trouble them. To this era belong the Sherman Act which prohibits monopolies, the Eighteenth Amendment which prohibited the liquor traffic, the Kellogg pact which prohibits war, and the Neutrality Acts which prohibit the United States from becoming involved in war. But in recent years we have adopted a new panacea. Having learned that the evils which afflict mankind cannot be cured by passing laws, our political leaders have passed on to the notion that most evils can be cured by appropriating money. They have had a lot of practice in appropriating money, and many of them have as much faith today in an appropriation bill as the solution of a problem as they formerly had in a prohibitory law.

In the current debate between the isolationists and the non-isolationists both sides are now assuming that whatever the dangers which confront the nation, whatever it is necessary and wise to do, the answer will be found in making more money available. The current isolationist position is that we can make ourselves secure by appropriating money for the navy. The current non-isolationist position is that in addition to appropriating money for the navy, we probably ought to amend the law in order to enable the Allies to borrow money. Both assume that if only enough money is made available we shall be secure. They differ only in this: that the isolationists wish to make the money available to the United States Navy alone, whereas the others wish also to make money available to the Allies.

WE ARE, I am afraid, not looking the true facts in the face, and so we are deceiving ourselves. The facts are these: neither the United States Government nor the Allies lack money: what is lacking in the United States, dangerously lacking, is not "purchasing power," but the capacity to produce quickly and in sufficient quantity warships, airplanes, guns and other weapons of war. Our politicians are too busy with greater things to explain this to the people. So they are letting the people have the impression that in order to obtain armaments all that anyone has to have is money: you order them if you can pay for them, and pretty soon you take delivery, and that is that.

But it is not. Congress can talk as much as it pleases about a "two ocean navy" and it can pass appropriations bills for a number of battleships. The two-ocean navy cannot be bought and delivered because the United States does not have the shipyards and the trained personnel and it does not have the plants to make the armor and the guns and the thousand and one other pieces of machinery. With our existing facilities it would probably take 10 years to construct a second navy and in the meantime the other navy would become at least partially obsolete.

THE SAME CONDITION holds as to Allied purchases in this country. Their money will hold out at the present rate of expenditure at least until the end of 1941. Their real problem is not to get credit but to get deliveries: if they could buy at once all the airplanes that they can afford to buy, they could obtain mastery of the air at once and they could probably win the war this year. In fact they have to spend their money slowly. They have to spend it slowly not because they are short of money but because our productive capacity is incapable at present of producing more rapidly.

In both cases, that of our own navy and that of the Allied air force, the crucial difficulty is not a lack of purchasing power. If money alone could buy security for us and the instruments of victory for them, no one would need to be be deeply concerned: the money is either available or can readily be obtained. The crucial difficulty, which makes us insecure and handicaps them critically, is that the plants have not been built, the tools have not been made, the labor has not been trained, in order to produce armaments as quickly as the condition of affairs in the world requires. To overcome this difficulty, appropriation bills for the navy and credits for the Allies are no remedy; the remedy is a huge capital investment, a very large expansion and coordination of American industrial organization, and a wholly different tempo of work and discipline in action from that which now prevails among the managers and the workers in industry. Even if this miracle could be wrought in an election year, it would be a painfully long time before American industry could become equal to the demand which almost surely it will have to meet.

THERE ARE NO indications, unhappily, that the political leaders in either party have any intention now of even beginning seriously to prepare the country for the realities which it may soon have to face. Our political leaders are not acting seriously and truthfully in the public interest; they are playing politics when the world is on fire. Yet the truth is plain and simple and urgent and beyond controversy. For it makes no difference in this most fundamental matter whether one is an isolationist or not; the fundamental things which most urgently need to be done are the same whatever the policy which the country adopts about helping or not helping the Allies.

If the isolationists have their way and if the Allies should happen to lose, we shall be isolated in a very dangerous and exceedingly envious and unfriendly world. The isolationists realize this dimly, because they argue that the United States must be ready to defend itself with a great navy. All the more reason why they ought to be the first to insist that American industry be expanded, organized, trained and disciplined to produce the means to protect our vital interests. For if by a policy of isolation we find ourselves isolated in a totalitarian world we shall need far greater naval and military forces than we are able now to create.

If the non-isolationists should turn out to be right in thinking that the war in northern Europe may develop into a world war once the Allies seem to be losing, they must not imagine that they can avert this universal catastrophe by telling the Allies they may borrow money on gilt-edge securities through J. P. Morgan & Co. That is wishful thinking. If the Allies are being knocked out and the war becomes world wide, with Italy, Japan and Russia joining in for the kill, the Allies will not have any credit left; if we made them a present of all the gold in Kentucky, that gold could not be turned into warships and airplanes and guns fast enough to save them from destruction, or ourselves from the consequences of living alone, and isolated, in a world where there is total anarchy with at least four great militarist powers on the make. Gold is useful if you have time to invest it, and make it produce weapons. But if you do not have time because you have neglected to prepare your industry for a critical emergency, the gold is of no account.

SO WHETHER we think we can achieve security by armed isolation or that we must also do what we can to insure the Allies against defeat, the place where we have to act, the place where we shall win or lose our own national security, is not on the battlefields of Europe or in the islands of the Pacific, nor even, as we rather grandly like to say, "in this hemisphere." The place is within the United States and inside the American industrial system. If we allow it to remain at its present low level of productivity, then it does not much matter whether we call ourselves isolationists or not, the result will be much the same. We shall be unprepared to preserve our security, and all our policies will be empty words.

The Pioneer Urge

THE PIONEER urge in the hormones of three generations of Murdocks had taken them all the way from the hills of Scotland to the Columbia River. John Murdock was the fourth generation and his brothers were contented enough on the ranch near the Dalles. But he wasn't. The call of the wild geese was in his blood and he had to roll and go.

In "Wild Geese Calling" (Doubleday, $2.75), Stewart Edward White tells John Murdock's story and that of Sally Slocum, the girl with the pioneer heritage whom he met and married all in the same day. It's a highly readable story, with an open-air freshness to it. We forget sometimes that there is always a last frontier—for John and Sally, it was Alaska just before the Klondike strike. For John's and Sally's great-grandchildren it may be Mars or the moon. Wherever it is, much the same people heed its call—not all of them the worthy and the virtuous, as Mr. White points out, in his interesting foreword. John and Sally were the best sort of pioneers—almost too proud at times. But Mr. White has told of their high-hearted adventure and of the hazards overcome en route to their promised land with a vividness of detail and a sureness of pace that are going to set a good many model suburbanites practicing sailor's knots and dreaming over little Jimmy's elementary geography. There's a sleeping Robinson Crusoe in all of us, and Mr. White knows just how to wake it.

MR. WHITE knows the woods and the mountains, the sort of lumber camp where John and Sally set up housekeeping for the first time, the way of a boat in the waters and the feel and smell and look of virgin country. He knows how a nail is countersunk and a trap line set and a tree felled. He also knows how a certain kind of open-air man behaves and acts, face to face with the emergencies of weather and nature.

Some of his characters and a few of his situations are stock—notably Annabelle, the warm-hearted harlot with the brogue who helps deliver Sally's first child in the Alaskan wilderness. I am sure that he can give chapter and verse for all of them, but he has written them as if they were stock, and stock they remain. It doesn't matter. This is not a book to be read with a wet towel around your head but a story to be enjoyed. It is full of alarms, excursions, adventure, enough accurate information on how to live in the wilderness to set up a dozen troops of Boy Scouts, and a likable and convincing hero and heroine. In the sinister but engaging Chilkat Harry, vain and trigger-sensitive, Mr. White has drawn, and accurately, a portrait of another sort of adventurer, also typical to frontiers.

Whether one believes in racial urges or not Mr. White makes his essential point about pioneering. You can write about economic motives till you're black in the face; they will not explain, completely, the first pouring into Kentucky any more than they are going to explain, completely, the first successful space ship. What made people pick up and go when they were pretty well fixed where they were? In his tale of a pioneering not 50 years in the past, Mr. White has done a first-class job of storytelling and comes closer to certain pioneer essentials than some of the economic historians.

After The Funds Run Out

By Mark Sullivan

The U. S. Faces a Decision

A READER SEES in the paper a fragment of news. For example, this in a dispatch from London some days ago: "The British treasury will requisition 17 more dollar securities held by residents of the United Kingdom."

A reader sees that, and wonders what it means; or perhaps does not wonder but just passes on. It happens every day, to millions of readers, about all sorts of news. To explain just where such bits of news fit into the whole pattern of world events, their bearing on future developments—that is the duty of commentators. The present example can be made clear by recalling something this column has said hitherto.

SIR JOHN SIMON

Some time ago I pointed out: That Britain and France are buying supplies in the United States. For those supplies they pay cash. They pay cash because our citizens are forbidden to give them credit, by two laws. Our neutrality law forbids every American citizen to sell to any nation at war except for cash. Further, our neutrality law forbids any American banker or other citizen to loan money to a nation at war. Also our Johnson Act forbids every American citizen to give credit to any nation which owes money to the American Government, and has defaulted in payment. That law applies to both Britain and France. By all these provisions of our laws, Britain and France are obligated to pay cash. They can buy no other way.

Paying in cash means paying in dollars. When Britain buys supplies from its own citizens, at home, it can pay in its own currency, pounds. But to buy in America, Britain must have dollars.

NOW, FOR GETTING dollars, Britain has, mainly, three ways—and all three ways are limited.

(a) Britain can send over some of such gold as she has, and turn the gold into dollars. The quantity of gold Britain has is limited.

(b) Britain's manufacturers can send us goods, as in ordinary peace-time trade, such as textiles and hardware. But British labor and factories will be so busy making war supplies that they can have little time to make ordinary goods. So that source of dollars is limited.

(c) The British government has required her citizens to turn over to the government the stocks and bonds of American companies which they possess. The British government sells these American securities and thus acquires dollars. (Here you see the significance of the news item quoted above.) The quantity of these securities is limited.

Hence: Britain's capacity to get dollars must come to an end. Therefore her capacity to pay cash, must come to an end sometime—in a year, two years, or whenever.

When that time comes, America will be forced to a decision. What happens when Britain's cash runs out? Will we shrug our shoulders, like the man behind the counter of a cash store, and say, "No cash, no goods?"

We would be reluctant to say that, for two reasons:

First, hundreds of our factories, millions of our workers, making war supplies for the Allies, would have to stop doing that. As a nation uncomfortable about unemployment, we would not like that.

Second, when the Allies can no longer pay cash, that very fact will be a sign that the Allies are in danger of losing the war. If and when we realize that, how will we feel? Will we say, "Let them lose, let Germany win?" It is most seriously doubtful that we should be willing to say that.

But, if we wish Britain to continue to get our goods, how is it to be managed? We could say, "All right, you can have the supplies on credit—we will change the law so as to allow it."

CREDIT, YES—BUT whose credit? The private manufacturers'? A company makes airplanes for Britain, for cash so far. Will that company let Britain have the planes on credit? That is not practicable. Manufacturers are not equipped to give long-term credit to any customers.

Will you private bankers extend the credit to Britain, taking Britain's bonds and selling them to our people? That would be practicable, to some extent, but it would not be enough. In the Great War, the total of bonds of all the Allies—Britain, France and Belgium—that our bankers sold in America, was less than a billion dollars. That was only a fraction of what was needed then, or is likely to be needed now.

If private manufacturers and private bankers can't supply the necessary credit, who then? There is only the Government. Would our Government loan many billions to the Allies? To do that would be a serious decision. Further, could we be sure that such loans would really be loans? Could Britain and France repay, would not these "loans" actually be gifts?

I ask these questions, so that America may think about them. As President Roosevelt was glad of the Greenland incident, because it made America think about our relation to the war, so is it useful for America to observe every sign of future developments, and consider their bearing on our own course. You don't escape questions by just not thinking about them. And thinking about questions, if sound, and if done in time, may achieve better results than just ignoring the questions.

U. S. Workers Plan Summer Resort on Roof

Surplus Commodities Staff Visions Oasis On Top of Building

By Edward Ryan

The Hanging Gardens of Babylon would have nothing on the Government rooftops of Washington if some "wishful thinking" reported yesterday should flourish.

This thinking, current among a score or more employes in a Government outpost at Fifth and K streets northwest, is directed toward transforming their rooftop into an informal summer resort.

The employes work for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corp. During the past two weeks they have been moving into the Steuart Building, to find on top of its seven stories, of all things, a roof. The roof is wide and long, roughly a quarter of a block in area, and empty.

Now a surplus commodity itself, the roof already has bloomed, in the minds of the wishful thinkers, into an aerial oasis.

Badminton and Shuffleboard

It would have badminton courts, perhaps a shuffleboard reservation. There would be awnings, bright in the sunlight, shading benches where the busy employe might sit awhile at midday and drink the outdoors with his lunch.

There is nothing aimless about the wishing. It has reached the point now where the thinkers have become an informal committee with one of their members assigned to draw up a plan.

Main features of the plan include what the roof should be, and a method of making it that way, through a welfare organization to finance the program by cooperation.

There are obstacles. As yet no surplus showers in the building or the neighborhood have been discovered, a lack which would limit the cheeriness of an after-hours badminton match.

Before the Surplus Commodities staff moved in, the Steuart offices were occupied by the United States Housing Authority. Their attention stayed focused indoors, and the roof was left bare.

Even in its tentative stage the Surplus Commodities rooftop plan has been reported as far south as the Agriculture Department, beyond the Mall. In the area between and around these points are acres of Government rooftops and miles of balconies, bright yesterday, and arid.

No Furloughs for 100

More than 100 PWA employes who faced furloughs will still be working after June, Col. E. W. Clarke, acting PWA commissioner said yesterday.

Instead of the 200 reported earlier to be headed for furloughs, Col. Clark told members of Local 167 of the United Federal Workers that "it now seems certain the number will be less than 100."

Col. Clark added that 50 employes furloughed from the PWA Projects and Statistics Division had found work with the Bituminous Coal Division. He said it would be a policy to keep the staff as large as possible during the first part of the next fiscal year. Under the present program, PWA will wind up its business by June 30, 1941.

While stating that "conditions look more promising," Colonel Clark advised the employes to accept jobs in private industry or other Government agencies of they could find them.

Irwin Elber, U. F. W. A. organizer, told the group that Congress, by approving the shutting down of PWA's program, is sending thousands of workers into an "economic no-man's land."

Laundry Bill Ironed Out

A mixup over a $1.91 laundry bill has been ironed out in favor of the National Youth Administration, and the District Government, by a decision of Acting Comptroller General Richard N. Elliott.

His decision said that the N. Y. A. can get its laundry done at Lorton Reformatory, and pay the District for it.

The question was whether emergency funds upon which NYA operates, could be used for services performed by convict labor. Under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act for 1935, it was held that these funds were not available to pay for materials and supplies made by convict labor in Federal prisons.

The Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits told Elliott there was "reasonable doubt" that hte $1.91 payment was in keeping with the "purpose and spirit" of the 1939 Emergency Relief Appropriation Act.

Elliott found the 1939 act did not "contain any inhibition against the procurement, for administrative needs of supplies or services into which convict labor had entered."

He added that the $1.91 could be paid to the District's tax collector.

Committee Dispute Holds Up Job Insurance Law Changes

Disagreement Reported Over Setting Of Minimum Weekly Compensation For District at $6 Compromise

Another snarl in the legislative maneuvers to amend the District Unemployment Compensation Act developed yesterday in the judiciary subcommittee of the House District Committee.

After Chairman Jennings Randolph, of the full committee, had called a special meeting today to approve the amendments, he was forced to postpone it because of the failure of the subcommittee to reach an agreement on the revised draft of the "compromise" bill.

Randolph said he understood a new "hurdle" had arisen and that if the subcommittee came to an agreement today he would call a special meeting of the full committee for tomorrow. He already has consulted Majority Leader Sam Rayburn about the possibility of presenting the measure to the House this week rather than awaiting the next District day, May 13.

Representative McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, said that the latest difficulty has to do with the minimum benefit of $6 a week, which was accepted last week by the subcommittee as a compromise between $5 and $7 in the McGehee and Eberharter bills respectively.

The House District Committee yesterday approved proposed amendments to the District child labor law in the face of another threat of opposition from a local "ladies lobby."

The amendments are designed to lower the age to 14 years at which juveniles may appear on the legitimate stage providing approval is obtained from the board of education.

Hardly had the committee acted before Mrs. Ernest W. Howard, of the Federation of Women's Clubs, announced that her organization would renew its fight on the legislation. She pointed out that only six members of the committee were present when the action was taken.

Several weeks ago the "ladies lobby" was successful in persuading the House to recommit the bill to the District Committee. At that time, however, it carried no minimum age limit.

Bootlegger Guilty Of Murder in Crash

The conviction of Charles S. Lee, 36, colored, of second degree murder was upheld yesterday by the United States Court of Appeals.

Carrying a load of illicit liquor, Lee was speeding in flight from officers on September 4, 1938, when his automobile hit another and killed two of the occupants.

Pointing out that Lee admitted taking part in bootleg "wars" before, the court said that his engaging in unlawful liquor running was enough to brand his acts with the "malice" which would make his offense murder, rather than negligent homicide.

Hawkins' Death Adjudged Suicide

A certificate of suicide was issued by the coroner's office late yesterday afternoon in the case of John Taylor Hawkins, 30, of 1343 H street northeast.

Hawkins, a truck driver, unemployed for two months, was found unconscious on the floor of the kitchen at his home yesterday noon by a sister, Mrs. Barbara MacMahon, of 1436 R street northwest. A rubber hose was in his mouth, according to police. He was taken to Casualty Hospital where Dr. Richard Gitter pronounced him dead at 12:55 p. m.

Health Department Needs More Nurses, Miss Prescott Tells Social Agencies Council

Washington lacks a well-rounded child health program because of a scarcity of nurses in the Health Department, Miss Josephine Prescott, director of the Jepartmen's nursing bureau, told the Council of Social Agencies' health division yesterday.

At this stock-taking meeting at the Y. W. C. A. in connection with the national observance of Child Health Day Wednesday, Miss Prescott declared of facilities here:

"There is no planned health nursing service for children with communicable diseases, and no nursing service for those patients registered at the Health Department clinics when they are delivered in their homes by medical students from the universities."

School Nurses Lacking

Washington has only about one-half of the minimum number of 315 public health nurses, according to the standard set by the American Public Health Association, Miss Prescott said. These nurses include both those in the Health Department and others in the Instructive Visiting Nurse Society, it was pointed out.

Although a city of Washington's size should have a minimum of 62 school nurses, she said, it has only 11 assigned to this job, and some of these are now on sick or annual leave at all times.

A gratifying drop in infant mortality in the District has followed the increase in Health Department services to mothers and children, Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, director of its Bureau of Maternal and Child Welfare, said. She pointed out the increase in the number of mothers receiving prenatal care early in pregnancy, and declared that "prenatal care is the foundation stone of child care."

Dr. John H. Lyons, president of the D. C. Medical Society, in his discussion of surgery and child health, warned on the danger of delay in diagnosis and the wrong use of laxatives, particularly in appendicitis cases. He warned further against the danger of burns to children, because, he said, 45 per cent of the lethal burns annually in the United States are among children.

Mrs. Graham Speaks

"Because the skin of a child is thin, the destruction is likely to be more complete than in an adult victim," he asserted.

Dr. P. A. McLendon, assistant professor of pediatrics at George Washington University medical school, said the school doctors and nurses are primarily concerned with child morbidity which causes considerable loss of time from school in the first few years. "A lot of children's illnesses are unpreventable at the present time, but periodic check-ups to discover defects and malnutrition help in prevention," he pointed out.

Mrs. R. M. Graham, representing the summer round-up program of the Parent-Teacher Associations here, said that 38 schools last year completed round-ups in which 788 children were examined. Advice given to the parents was followed in most cases, she said, and as a result 70 per cent of the children examined entered school in the fall with defects corrected.

Miss Gertrude H. Bowling, executive director of the Instructive Visiting Nurse Society, discussed its work. Miss Naomi Deutsch of the Children's Bureau, consultant on public health nursing, told how Federal grants to State and Territorial health departments had made possible an increase in the number of public health nurses and a more adequate service.

George St. John Perrott, chairman of the health division of the council, presided at the meeting.

Clark Urges 'Bona Fide' U. S. Reform

Business Can Carry 'Load,' 50-Year Trade Club Told by Hill

Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, called upon Congress last night for a "bona fide reorganization of the Federal Government for the purpose of economy" and "perpetuity of our institutions" at a banquet at the Willard Hotel to honor 130 Washington concerns that have been in business 50 years.

The Missourian told 400 business leaders and members of the House and Senate attending the banquet of the National Fifty Years in Business Club that the growth of Washington "bureaucracy" is the most vital question "involving the people of the United States."

He was followed by T. Russ Hill, president of Rexair, Inc., who declared that business, if given the opportunity, will carry "its load" and "pay the national debt off and supply the means of balancing the budget; employ the unemployed and provide a future for our youth."

Cites Deficit

"It is a fact," he said, "that we have a tremendous national debt and that the running expenses of Government are writing a huge deficit yearly. That the budget must be balanced and this debt paid is a self-evident fact. What happens if we do it either socially or economically is beside the point. History does not record a single nation that ever went to a dictatorship without first going through bankruptcy.

"If business is given a fixed and fair set of rules and honest refereeing under these rules, the taxes can be piled on to the limit and business will carry the load," he declared.

Hill charged that the "same powers and in many cases the same practices for which business was condemned in 1929" are now concentrated in "the provinces of government." He added: "As a result we are engaged in the great 'buck-passing' game."

For the Nation's unemployed youth, he said, "the answer is to be found in our ability to provide them with a field instead of a forum."

The field for youth and "the hope of tomorrow," he said, are the new "frontiers" of employment to be found in new technologies.

Senator Clark defined "bureaucracy" as "a vast organization of administrative officials of every category, who, once being on the public payroll, constantly devote their efforts, rarely in unison but always persistently, to increasing public expenditure."

He charged "complete and flagrant" disregard by the executive branch of the Government of the Federal law against lobbying by Federal employes.

"Secretary Ickes," he declared, "has even installed a radio station in the Interior Department itself where he and his subordinates can address the public in terms of suitable laudation of themselves and their activties and propaganda for the retention of his own job."

Clark named the Interior Department and the Department of Agriculture as violators of the anti-lobbying law in their struggle for the Forestry Service and the Bureau of Biological Survey.

Scores Policies

He charged Government agencies with pursuing antithetical policies and cited, as an example, the drainage of a lake by the Reclamation Bureau, against protest of the Biological Survey. The lake, he said, was found to have a peat bottom which has been burning since drainage.

James G. Stahlman, publisher of the Nashville Banner, likened the Federal Government to a business, established "150 years ago by a group of economic royalists." Referring by inference to some Administration advisers, he said every big business is equipped with "bright young men with bright ideas" who lack "sufficient practical experience to qualify as experts."

Stahlman called for strict adherence to principles on which the Government was founded as the way to "governmental, corporate or individual success, despite streamlined extremists and blitzkrieg business busters."

Stahlman, who presided, introduced C. C. Gilbert, executive director of the club, organized in Nashville in 1912. Members of the Washington hospitality committee for the banquet were Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Somerville, Mr. and Mrs. George D. Horning, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Archer L. Haycock, Mr. and Mrs. Joe H. Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. Granville Gude, Mr. and Mrs. Jay P. Conger, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander F. Funds for Study Awarded to 68 For Work in U. S.

Five Washingtonians are among recipients of the 68 fellowships awarded yesterday by the Julius Rosenwald Fund in Chicago, the Associated Press reported. The educational grants average $1,500 for a year's project.

District recipients of the award include Beatrice Y. Black, 19, of 222 N street northwest; Hylan G. Lewis, 29, of 54 R street northwest; W. J. Trent, jr., 30, of 2115 Second street northwest; James A. Washington, jr., 25, of 923 Rhode Island avenue northwest, and Eric Williams, address unlisted.

A graduate of Dunbar High School, Miss Black is a graduate of Smith College and is studying mathematics at Brown University on a scholarship she won last year. Washington is also a Dunbar High alumnus, an honor graduate of Howard University and its law school, and currently a teaching fellow there. He will study at Harvard University Law School with the new fellowship funds.

Adviser on Negro affairs with the Federal Works Agency, and formerly with the Interior Department in the same capacity, Trent is a graduate of Livingstone College, Salisbury, N. C., and has studied at the universities of Pennsylvania and Chicago. He plans to return to the University of Pennsylvania to work on a Ph. D. dissertation dealing with the occupational pattern of Negroes in America.

Lewis is an instructor at Howard University, studying on leave of absence at Chicago University on a similar Rosenwald fellowship. His thesis deals with social differentiation in the Negro community. Lewis earned degrees at Virginia Union and Chicago universities.

Western High Students Win Bible Contest

Ivajean Dollarhide And John Harrison Take Story Prizes

Two Western High School students captured first honors last night in the senior annual Bible story-telling contest of the Sunday School Association, held at the Y. M. C. A.

Ivajean Dollarhide, 17, of 2033 F street northwest, won first prize in the girls' division, and John R. Harrison, 16, of 3157 Nineteenth street, North Arlington, Va., led the boys' contest.

Ivajean, who goes to Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, said she plans to go to George Washington University next year, but has no career in mind yet. John, of the Congress Street Methodist Church, also wants to go to college.

Second prizes went to Rennie S. Gulick, 420 Cummings lane, Chevy Chase, Md., and Althea Ransom, 1343 Clifton stret northwest, who were tied in the girls' division. Second prize for the boys was won by Robert J. Patch, 3610 Albemarle street northwest.

John A. Patterson, vice president of the Sunday School Association, presided over a board of judges comprising W. W. Everett, M. D. Lamborne, E. D. Cunningham, William S. Jones, A. N. Schroeder and George E. Harris.

Other contestants in the finals included Dorothy Smith, Alice Brewer, Jean Crane, Marien Bien, Eleanore Steele, Carole Lenfera, Jane Kester and Marietta Terrill among the girls. Other boys in the finals were Robert Drew, Fred Shirley, George Frederick Emch, Charles Campbell and Ivan Kester.

More than 100 friends and relatives of the contestants were on hand for last night's finals.

Meeting Today To Map Drive For Symphony

Two Committees To Discuss Plans For Fund Campaign

Two committees will hold pre-campaign meetings today in preparation for the National Symphony Orchestra's tenth annual sustaining fund drive to raise a minimum of $107,600 to provide for the orchestra's 1940-41 season. The campaign will open next Monday and will continue for ten days.

At 4:30 p. m. the business and professional committee, John Rowland Hill, chairman; Ruby A. Black, Margaret A. Blackistone, Bert M. Sarazan and James W. Hardey, vice chairman, will meet at the Raleigh Hotel. The orchestra guild committee, Mrs. Charles Bittinger and Mrs. Foster Adams, cochairmen, will meet at the Arts Club, 2017 I street northwest, at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

To more efficiently reach the various business and professional groups, Hill has divided his forces into more than a dozen subcommittees. In charge of those who will solicit the automobile dealers is William G. Hill; department stores, Herbert J. Rich; hotels and restaurants, John Gheen; construction group, E. L. Davis; lawyers, Howard S. LeRoy; doctors, Dr. William Earl Clark; banks, Joshua Evans; Connecticut avenue stores, Mrs. Carl Droop; and music stores, Carl Droop. Other committees will be assigned today.

Mrs. Bittinger and Mrs. Adams have divided the orchestra guild committee into 15 teams which will be captained by, in addition to themselves, Mrs. Lewis Bartlett, Mrs. Fisher Dunlap, Mrs. Warren Grimes, Mrs. Mary Hobart, Mrs. John B. Hutson, Mrs. Harry Irion, Mrs. Peter Langhoff, jr., Mrs. Alela Payne, Mrs. J. Frank Staley, Miss Mable Strider, Mrs. Edward Sweeney, Mrs. Boyd Taylor and Miss Dorothy Thompson.

Attendance 'Poor,' Speaker Tells Evangelical Synod

Frederick, Md., April 29 (AP).—Attendance in the Potomac Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church is still "poor," although most churches report increases over last year, the Rev. Scott R. Wagner, of Hagerstown, told the Conference of the united group tonight.

The report of Dr. Wagner, synod president, was made after a devotional service at Grace Evangelical Church.

Fifty-three ministers and 35 lay delegates from Maryland, Virginia and the District registered for the sessions, which end Wednesday.

Dr. Wagner quoted portions of two reports he said had been submitted. They were:

"No loyalty on the part of young people," and "High schools make far too great demands on them——."

The first ballots were taken for election of three ministers and three lay delegates to the Lancaster, Pa., synod in June, but results will not be announced until later.

Capital News in Brief

Squirrels Would Like 'Em

"Nuts. Yes, I said nuts. Fifty pounds of them."

This was the reply a skeptical station clerk at Eighth Precinct received last night when he evidenced surprise at a report turned in over the phone by W. R. Bluedron, of 5318 Thirty-second street northwest.

Bluedron said he found a carton of shelled and roasted cashew nuts on the curb at Nevada avenue and Thirty-sixth street northwest while taking a walk. Bluedron was advised to keep the nuts at home while police investigate.

Tale of Milk and Money

It is not recorded which was the more surprised, Mrs. Florence McDaniel, of 1447 Chapin street northwest, or the colored man who snatched her pocketbook at Fourteenth and Chapin.

The footpad got the purse and $2.70. He also got a quart bottle of milk which Mrs. McDaniel, startled into action, broke over his head.

Delawareans Gather

President Walter Hullihen of the University of Delaware discussed progress of the institution at a meeting of the Washington Club of the university at Wesley Hall last night. He urged alumni interest in the school.

Other speakers were Milton L. Draper, president of the University Alumni Association, and John N. McDowell, executive secretary of the association. Presiding at the dinner gathering was Oliver C. Short, president of the local organization.

Says He's Coming Again

For the third time in two weeks a colored youth last night robbed the High's ice cream store at 1016 North Capitol street. He held up Ellatine Hudson, 23, of 943 K street northwest, and took $7.

Previously he had taken $7 from Brana Dardin, of 1216 B street southeast, and $10 from Evelyn Crovo, of 1254 Holbrook terrace northeast, clerks in the same store.

As he left last night, the young bandit remarked:

Three Little Girls—Gone

Three sisters, Mary, 13; Betty Jane, 15, and Annie, 17, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sullivan, 495 I street southwest, have been missing from their home since Sunday night, their parents reported.

Have Hay Fever? Cheer Up— It Means You're Intelligent

If spring and summer are just one long sneeze for you, take courage—you are probably one of the intelligentsia.

A red-eyed, sneezing, sniffling and earnest group of 40 persons at a health lecture at the Y. M. C. A. last night heard this message with obvious relief.

The speaker was Dr. W. T. Harrison, senior surgeon of the United States Public Health Service, and his fund of knowledge on asthma, hay fever, and allergies is nothing to sneeze at. Said Dr. Harrison:

"Allergies such as in hay fever affect the more intelligent part of the population. If that is because their nervous systems are more sensitive, I do not know."

But Dr. Harrison did know four rules for reducing hay fever sneezing from an atchoo to an itch and from an itch to a feeling of peace and sneezeless contentment.

The rules:

1. Avoid sudden chills. For instance, put on a bathrobe when you get out of bed in the morning.
2. Exercise is good because it generates body heat, but guard against inhaling large draughts of pollen while exercising.
3. Keep bedroom windows closed during the day and open them at night for sleeping.
4. Use an air filter on windows, if possible.

And, of course, see your doctor.

Washingtonians who are sensitive to ragweed, the doctor advised, should take their vacations between August 20 and September 20, when ragweed pollen is heaviest. He advised Maine, Vermont, Canada's maritime provinces, southern Florida and the Rockies as good vacation spots for hay fever victims.

Citizens Tell School Board Of Needs

Budget Conference Asks Replacement, Enlarging or Repair Of Dozen Plants

A far-reaching construction and equipment program for District public schools was urged last night, as representatives of communities and civic groups filed before the Board of Education to present their "urgent needs" for consideration in the making of the 1942 budget.

New buildings, replacements and additions were asked for more than a dozen schools, at the meeting which the board held at Thomson school in accordance with its annual custom.

Other requests extended to additional teachers, improvement of grounds, modernization of equipment.

Mrs. John E. O'Hara, representing the Association for the Education of Handicapped Children, urged that 32 teachers for this purpose be provided in the next budget, to double the number for the coming session.

Southeast Wants Junior High

Among requests for construction, a statement from William A. Maio, of the Southeast Washington Citizens' Association, asked for "a modern junior high school center" for this section and a new building for Wallach School.

A statement from the Southeast Council of Citizens' Associations included a request for the erection of an elementary school in the vicinity of Minnesota and E streets southeast to replace the portables now in use.

Among other construction requests were a new wing for Eliot Junior High School, a 10-room addition at Taft Junior High School, and a new Grant School.

A spokesman from the Northwest Citizens Council stressed the need for a school in the American University Park section.

A group of citizens from Bradbury Heights asked for a six-room extensible building for an elementary school in their community.

H. B. Otterman, representing the Alice Deal Home and School Association, urged the need for an assistant principal and an additional clerk. He said also that more teachers were needed to relieve the classes that are "now running over forty."

Lincoln Request

Edward F. Harris, president of Lincoln Civic Association, urged an additional assistant superintendent for the colored schools, Divisions 10-13 of the system.

"Increased personnel is needed in the attendance department; too many children are playing hookey and getting away with it," he added. "Our administrative principals have too much paper work," he said, in urging that clerks be appointed for all these principals.

Benjamin T. Montgomery, the Browne Junior High Parent-Teacher Association, insisted on the need for a 10-room addition.

A spokesman for Slater-Langston School urged the purchase of land for a playground, because "the school is in the heart of the tuberculosis area" and citizens there feel that playground facilities would help to relieve that problem, he said.

A spokesman for the Bruce School asked for an addition containing an auditorium-gymnasium. From a representative of the Harrison P.-T. A. came a plea for a playground and an assembly hall. From Terrell Junior High School came a request for more classrooms and shops, more play space and additional personnel.

Heating Defects Reported

A spokesman from Fairbrother-Rossell school asked for correction of alleged defects in the heating system and sanitary system and sanitary facilities. The statement said that these conditions had been pronounced unsatisfactory by fire inspector and health inspector.

Bill Shrout complained of old boilers in the heating system at Hilton-Peabody school, hinting that there might be some danger if they should burst. Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of school, said that no danger from such a source existed in any of the schools, and that boilers are inspected several times a year.

Doria Cloutier, of the Washington Youth Council, urged an increase in vocational guidance in the high schools, with at least one full-time person assigned to this work in each of these schools. Her statement recommended also a survey of education in the District as a basis for long-range planning.

Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the board, who was in charge of the meeting, said that all the requests would be studied, and that the budget would represent the "best effort" in attempting to deal with them.

Lifelong Residents of Capital Mark Golden Wedding Date

Mr. and Mrs. William Frazier cut a piece of their golden wedding cake for Shirley Ann Martin, 3, their youngest grandchild

Fraziers Celebrate Fiftieth Anniversary In Presence of Kin in Gales Street Home, Where They Have Lived for 28 Years

Unchallenged patriarch and matriarch of Gales street northeast last night were Mr. and Mrs. William T. Frazier, whose trim, two-storied frame house bears the number 1633.

Surrounded by their six daughters and sons-in-law, seven grandchildren and other relatives they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary and looked back on lifetimes spent in Washington and 28 years' residence in their present home.

Mr. Frazier, 73, a painter, was in a hilarious mood.

"The way to stay married 50 years," he said, "is don't get too mad when your wife wants something."

Mrs. Frazier, 72, accepted the remark with indulgent silence. She said her secret was that she is "a good listener."

Over the heads of the couple, as they sat at a table laden with food and drink, hung a large gilded sign reading "Best Wishes: Golden Wedding Anniversary." Centerpiece of the table was a huge double-decker golden wedding cake.

Patriarch Frazier, who still works on a scaffold, said he would be back on the job as usual this morning.

Guests included:

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Watson and son, Donald; Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Hirsch and daughter, Hilda; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Martin and children, Lawrence, jr., Billy and Shirley; Miss Olive Frazier and Samuel Motts; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Teague and children, Wade and Robert J.; Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Giddings, Mrs. Altie R. Crown and Jack Gatley.

Douglas Gives Advice to G. U. Law Editors

Passes on Holmes' Admonition to Pay Attention to Details

Associate Justice William O. Douglas, of the United States Supreme Court, commended senior members of the staff of the Georgetown University Law Journal as members of an "energetic, high-minded organization serving its community" at the publication's annual dinner held last night at the Carlton Hotel.

From an unpublished letter of the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, Justice Douglas read what he termed his own recommendation to the students. The letter read in part:

"You all probably are thinking about your chances of success. If you have the fire in your belly that keeps your heart warm through dull and hopeless months, and if you realize that the meanest details are parts of a nighty whole— I predict a happy result."

The Rev. Francis E. Lucey, S. J., regent of the law school, told the students that "the next years are going to make you or break you. He urged them to "become interested in other subjects . . . You should have broad minds; eyes that see the whole picture, not just a portion of it."

C. Jonathan Hauck, jr., editor of the law journal, presided. Other speakers included Dr. Hugh J. Fegan, assistant dean of the law school, and Harold G. Reuschlein, faculty adviser of the publication.

U. S. Claims $1,325 From Estate Of Slain Consul

Government counsel took but five minutes yesterday to present the case on which they ask a District Court jury to grant a verdict for $1,325.16 against the estate of Maj. Robert W. Imbrie, vice consul who was murdered in Persia in 1924.

Mrs. Grace B. Stiles, assistant district attorney, told the six men and six women jurors that Maj. Imbrie was obliged to account for money he spent in an official capacity, that $1,325.16 of the expenditures was disapproved and that consequently he, or his estate, owed the Government the $1,325.16.

The estate contends some of the disallowed expenditures were made by Maj. Imbrie in carrying out secret duties for a high commission headed by the late Rear Admiral Mark H. Bristol.

Mrs. Imbrie's attorney, Henry J. Balzer, to support this view, subpoenaed Secretary of State Hull to produce department records. The court was told some of the documents would be produced but that others were regarded as confidential papers of the executive branch of the Government and were refused.

Fire Law Checkup Of D. C. Buildings Urged by Bolles

A proposal that a special group of metropolitan policemen be assigned the task of making a complete check-up of all Washington buildings to ascertain whether any of them are violating fire prevention regulations was made yesterday by Representative Stephen Bolles (Republican), of Wisconsin.

Bolles earlier had urged the House District Committee to resume a subcommittee investigation of the White Court Apartment fire so that corrective legislation may be enacted before Congress adjourns.

The Wisconsin member called attention to the Sunday night blaze at the Stanhope Apartments, 735 New Jersey avenue northwest, and pointed out that newspaper reports were that the fire alarm system was not working when the fire occurred.

Upon Bolles' suggestion the committee voted to ask for copies of the testimony taken at the coroner's inquest into the death of three persons in the White Court fire.

Joint Control OfRecreation Is Proposed

Subcommittee Of Senate Hears Plan for Parks Unit To Share Direction

Joint control of Washington's recreational facilities by the National Capital Parks Office and the Board of Education was proposed to the Senate sub-committee on District appropriations yesterday.

At the same time, spokesmen for the Interior Department reiterated Secretary Ickes' request that the National Capital Parks Office be given equal control with the commissioners over plans for the Scott Circle underpass and the Rock Creek Parkway under the Massachusetts Avenue Bridge.

Arno B. Cammerer, director of the National Parks Service, and Thomas S. Settle, secretary of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, testified. They were supported by Hugo Wolter, of the Washington Council of Social Agencies, and Weaver W. Pannburn, of the National Recreational Association.

Under Board in Bill

District recreational facilities are placed solely under the Board of Education in the House bill.

Requests for additional welfare and health funds were made by Mrs. Ruth Lester Buchanan, Mrs. Walter S. Ufford and Mrs. Elia West, social welfare workers.

Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith and Mrs. Basil Manly, representing the Twentieth Century Club, asked funds for an elevator in the crippled children's clinic at Gallinger Hospital, additional beds and nurses, and isolation and pediatrician wards.

Mrs. Harold Marsh spoke in favor of continuing the WPA household aid project.

Varied civic needs of Washington's colored population were explained by a delegation that included Prof. Charles Thomas, president of the Federation of Civic Associations; Prof. L. A. Ransom, Eugene Davidson, of the New Negro Alliance; Howard D. Woodson, of the Northeast Boundary Citizens Association, and T. J. Houston, of the Washington Housing Forum.

Schools Are Requested

A site for a new junior high school and an elementary school, together with more elementary teachers, was asked for the northeast section. An additional northeast police precinct and an M street bridge into Anacostia also were requested.

Houston criticized the Alley Dwelling Authority for tearing down slum buildings before providing other quarters for deposed tenants. Intensely crowded conditions prevail in some sections, he said. He cited one instance of 58 persons housed in an eight-room dwelling.

The delegation asked $3,000,000 for unemployment relief, to be made available to employables as well as unemployables.

The subcommittee will complete hearing civic spokesmen this morning. The hearings will close today with a delegation from the Board of Trade.

Two D. C. Women And Child Hurt In Auto Accidents

Two women and a child were injured here yesterday in traffic.

Mrs. Mamie Nash, 74, of 1419 N street northwest, struck by a taxicab at Fourteenth and N streets northwest, suffered a fractured left leg and broken collarbone. She was taken to Emergency Hospital.

Six-year-old Harold E. Thompson, of 36 Bates street northwest, was taken to Sibley Hospital wtih a compound fracture of the right leg and head injuries after being struck near his home by an auto.

A severely wrenched neck was suffered by Mrs. Emma Herbst, 2101 New Hampshire avenue northwest, when the auto she was riding in was hit from behind by a bus touring the city with teachers and students from the high school at Ansonia, Conn.

"Truest statement I ever saw on any billboard" writes Thomas Marinak and hundreds of folks back him up with letters like these:
"So this is the famous Gunther's beer I've heard talked about. I knew it must be good to deserve such praise, but I didn't know any beer could be this good. It has a beer-y flavor all its own."
James Shaughnessy
Chicago, Ill.
"This dry, light beer is the best discovery I ever made. Gunther's must be proud of producing a beer so dry and beer-y."
William Brinn

"I've never been much of a beer drinker because most beers are the sweet-type. I like the dry kind but they cost too much. On my way home from the World's Fair last summer I stopped off in Washington for lunch. I had a glass of Gunther's beer and am I sold on it! It has the best taste of any beer I ever had anywhere."

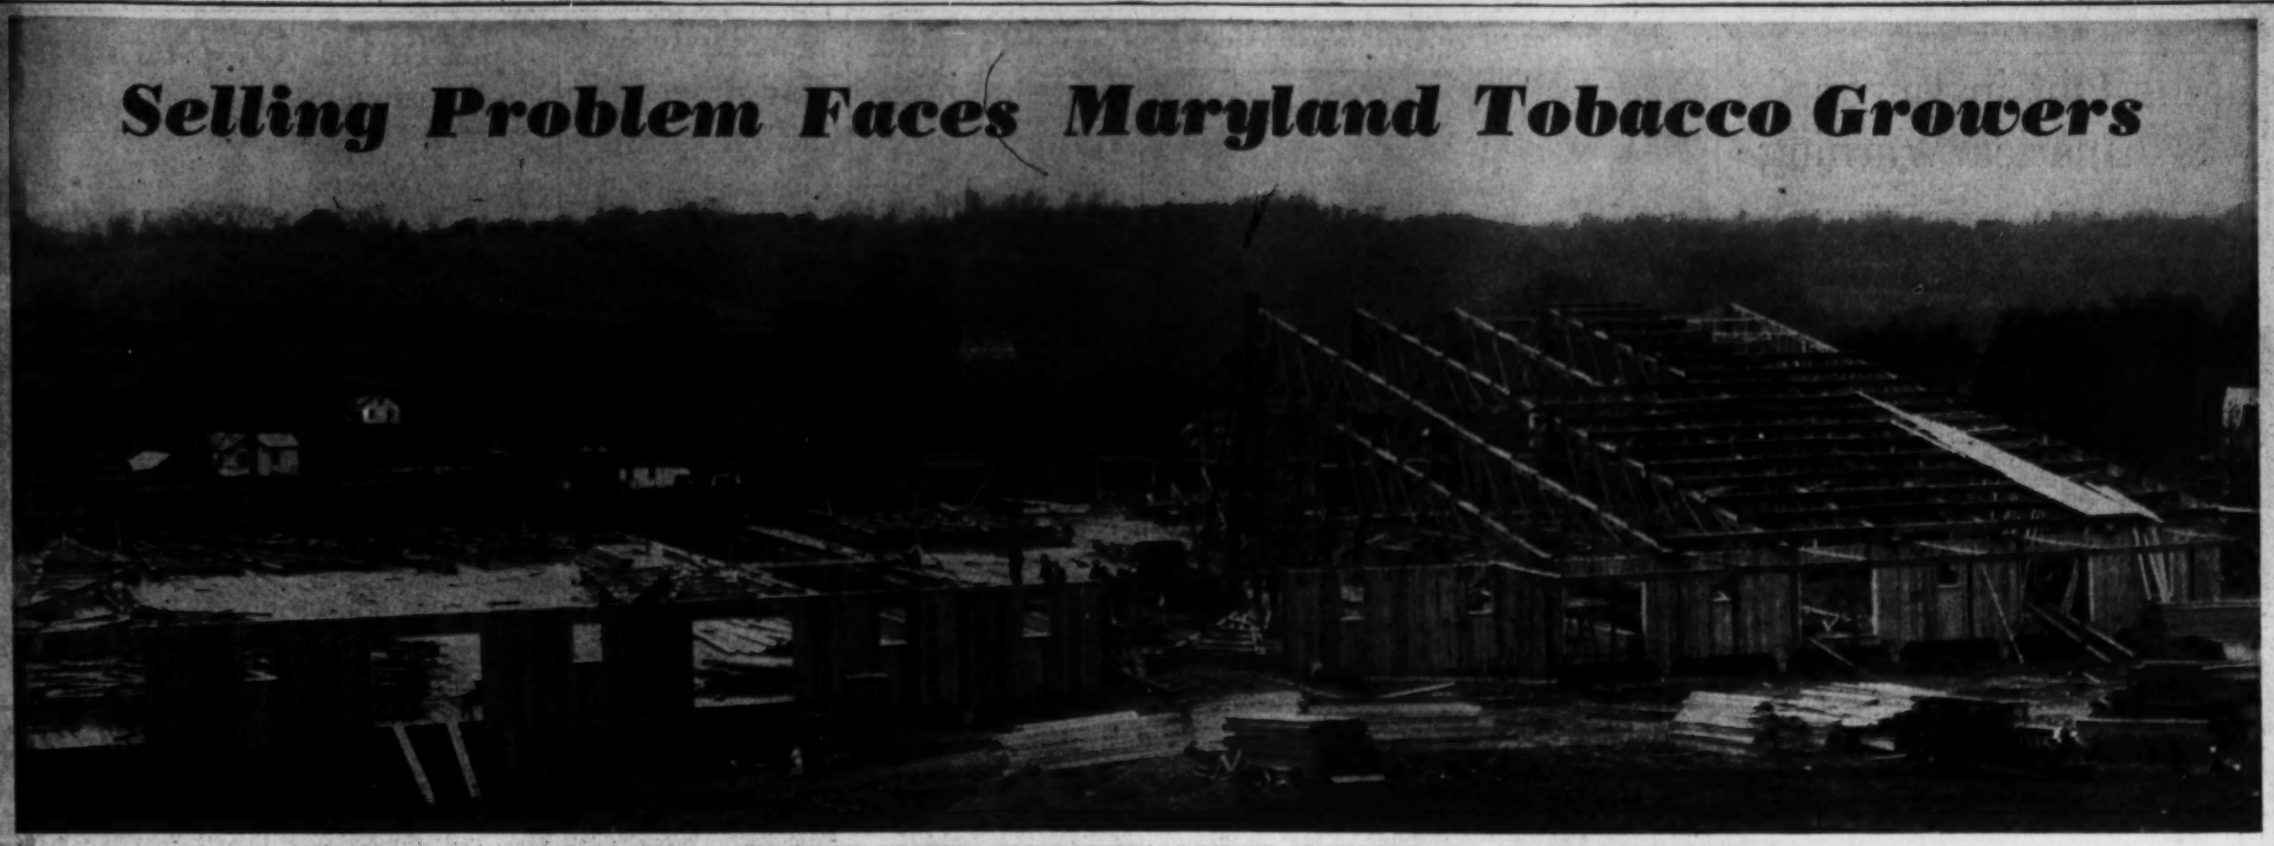
Selling Problem Faces Maryland Tobacco Growers



GIANT TOBACCO SALES HOUSE NEARING COMPLETION AT UPPER MARLBORO, MD. MARKET OPENS MAY 7

A 'Burden' of Tobacco – is hoisted by Robert Hugh and Owen Canter, farmhands, at Upper Marlboro

Will the loose-leaf (or auction) system of selling tobacco be adopted permanently in southern Maryland, as it has been in all other major tobacco-growing centers, or will the Baltimore market system, common to Maryland for 300 years, win out?

The answer hinges on what happens this selling season, which opens May 7, tobacco experts say. In their opinion, Maryland's crop is not large enough to support two competitive sales systems.

The auction system was introduced into Maryland last year. Discouraged with the steadily falling prices for their crops on the Baltimore market, the growers, at a series of meetings sponsored by the Farm Bureau, clamored for a chance to try out the proposed new way of marketing.

Sales houses were built at Hughesville in Charles County and Upper Marlboro in Prince Georges County. When the season closed, 7,000,000 pounds had been sold from the two floors. This was considerably less than the amount sold at Baltimore, but it was regarded as a sufficient indication of eventual success for the new system.

This year the Farm Bureau chapters in the five counties sponsored another series of meetings on the tobacco question, with the result that at every one the growers voted in favor of returning to the Baltimore market. Depsite this evidence of dissatisfaction with the new system, its backers predict a successful 1940 season. They point out that dealers have invested $300,000 in warehouses and markets in southern Maryland as evidence of their faith in the auction system.

Wilton Smith and his father, Maurice Smith, packing tobacco at James J. Buchheister's packing plant, Upper Marlboro, for the Baltimore market.

Two new marketing centers have developed, at Waldorf and La Plata, both in Charles County. At Upper Marlboro, a new sales house is being built, the Marlboro Tobacco Market is increasing its floor space, and two new packing plants are going up. At Hughesville, a new market is under construction.

The auction system will furnish employment for local labor and bring money into southern Maryland, proponents of the system contend. Furthermore, they say, buyers will pay better prices because they can see the tobacco before it is bought.

This latter contention is not borne out by Department of Agriculture statistics on the two markets last year, showing the average price per pound at Baltimore was slightly more than 19 cents and on the auction floors, slightly over 13 cents. However, its generally conceded that growers last year sent their top-grades to Baltimore, a fact that helps to account for the price difference.

Under the auction system, the tobacco is displayed on the sales floor in 100-pound "burdens." It is open to inspection of the buyer. Under the Baltimore system, the tobacco is brought to warehouses packed in hogsheads, carrying about 700 pounds. It may be stored free by the grower for an indefinite period. The selling is done by commission merchants, who charge $3 a hogshead.

When the hogsheads arrive, they are examined by State inspectors, who take a representative sample from each. The buyers bid on the basis of these samples.

ARCHITECT'S DRAWING OF THE FUTURE LANSBURGH & BROTHER DEPARTMENT STORE

Lansburgh & Bro.

Will Remodel Store

Lansburgh and Brother, the oldest department store in Washington, will begin to remodel and reface its Seventh street buildings Thursday

Gustav and James Lansburgh started the store in Washington in 1860 when they laid the foundation for future growth in a space 10 by 15 feet. In 1882 the firm announced that it would move north on Seventh street into 420, 422 and 424. The founders announced this move as the "biggest move in our business career." The three buildings are among the six now occupied by the store

In their day the present buildings were considered to be masterpieces of commercial architecture. Entrances will be streamlined in the new front and doors will open with the slightest touch. Porter and Locke are the architects and James Parsons the builder

"Lights Out in Europe" Gives America Warning

MORE TRAGIC than the lack of military preparedness is national indifference to its necessity, in the present mad state of the world.

Beyond anything else, this is the lesson that is driven conclusively and fearfully home by the Herbert Kline documentary production for Look-Ampix of "Lights Out in Europe," to follow "Ecstasy" on the screen at the Belasco Theater this week.

BELL

"Lights Out in Europe," previewed yesterday afternoon by an invited audience in the handsome theaterette in the Archives Building, covers the period between the Munich pact, and the failure of Prime Minister Chamberlain's appeasement policy, to the outbreak of the second European war within a quarter century. It deals less with the military aspects of the current conflict than with its preliminary and after effects upon the civilian populations of England and Poland. It was filmed with a discriminating eye and great photographic skill, for the most part in these two countries.

Dealing as it does with the civilian populations rather than with the military forces involved—although these naturally are touched upon incidentally—the picture reflects an attitude of mind which, one fears, is gaining far too strong and ominous a foothold in this country.

There is a warning for the United States and all of America in this picture that should not be ignored by those having the destiny of this Nation in charge. It is enthusiastically recommended to both houses of Congress as an object lesson that should not be tossed off with smug indifference or disregard of its alarming implications.

"Lights Out in Europe" is not too long to be viewed attentively by any audience. It consumes something less than an hour and 10 minutes of actual running time.

Lionel Barrymore and Lew Ayres, teamed in the "Dr. Kildare" pictures, both are musicians. Ayres already has composed one symphony, slated for presentation in his native Minneapolis next season, where his father was a member of the Minneapolis Symphony. He and his senior screenmate now are engaged on another. When he was still no more than a toddler, Ayres began the study of the piano under the tutelage of his grandmother, an accomplished musician in her own right. Later he twanged a banjo in popular dance orchestras. It was this roving career that took him eventually to Hollywood. The eldest of the Barrymores, of course, in addition to being a musician and composer, is an artist of no mean caliber, whose etchings rank high in contemporary art circles.

It must have been quite a party that Jack L. Warner, in charge of production for Warner Brothers, tossed recently in honor of Frank Capra and Robert Riskin, who are making "The Life of John Doe," starring Gary Cooper, as their first release through the Freres Warner. In addition to practically all of the other stars in Hollywood, all Academy Award winners resident in the film capital were on hand to brag about their "Oscars." These included Janet Gaynor, Mary Pickford, Warner Baxter, Norma Shearer, Lionel Barrymore, Fredric March—a recent visitor to Washington for the opening of Robert E. Sherwood's "There Shall Be No Night"—Charles Laughton, Claudette Colbert, Clark Gable, Bette Davis, Victor McLaglen and Spencer Tracy. The piece de resistance of the evening was a screening of "Cavalcade of Academy Awards."

The Washington Variety Club's social drought will be moistened on Friday night. The first stag smoker of the season will then be held, in honor of Abe Lichtman, of the Lichtman Theaters, who retired as chief barker of the club on January 1. Bill Dolph, of WOL, and Harry Anger, backstage major domo at the Earle, will be in charge of the production, thus insuring both aerial and ground attacks on the risibilities.

In a poll recently taken in France to determine the most popular leading woman and leading man of the films, moviegoers of that country selected the man they had affectionately nicknamed "Horseface" as their favorite. He is Fernandel—real name Ferdinand Constantin—star of "Harvest," opening with a specially sponsored preview in the Little Theater at tonight's last performance. Fernandel began his artistic career as a longshoreman on the docks at Marseilles, whence he was snatched as a potential actor. He was discovered by Sacha Guitry and made his first hit opposite Raimu.

Hollywood, April 28.

The scene Alfred Hitchcock was doing for "Foreign Correspondent" when I walked on the set, looked like a real one from the present war. In a tiny, stuffy hole in the wall set 75-year old Albert Basserman in bed, getting the third degree from Herbert Marshall, Edward Cellini, and half a dozen others. Door opened, in came George Saunders. Seeing a sick man, he immediately asked if anybody there needed life insurance. Not till then did they see the gun at his back. Scene was difficult to do—the place was so small — so when Saunders' shoulders came through the door, he hid the gun from the camera.

It was then Hitch said, "Contort yourself, George. Shrink to the size of a Disney dwarf." After the take he said, "Ashcan. Do another. Keep going, boys. What's holding us up?" When scene is no good, it's marked "N. G." because every inch of film must be account for. But Hitch says "Ashcan—and that's what it is.

Hitch liked Saunders so much in "Rebecca" that he's giving him his first pleasant role in "Foreign Correspondent." He's doing wonderful things for Laraine Day and Joel McCrea. The man who gave us "39 Steps" and "Rebecca" came up the hard way. His first picture was made in German, of which he spoke only a few words. That starred Virginia Valli. Next he got Nita Naldi for a star, and had to put her in "The Village Schoolmistress.'

The story that a movie magazine turned down $500 worth of pictures of Garbo taken on her Bermuda vacation was amusing, but pictures of her on the same vacation had already been turned down by a weekly magazine for $1,000. Her photos come high since she became the girl-friend of Gaylord Hauser.

The yarn about how they had tea with Mrs. Vanderbilt, whom they had never met until the lady poured, would roll you in the aisles. I don't believe Garbo herself knows how the invitation was managed. Hauser's publicity seems as good as his diet, but Garbo doesn't need it.

Geo. M. Cohan Frolics Again At the Tavern

"Return of Vagabond" Is Another Merry, Satirical Hodge-Podge

By Nelson B. Bell

"THE RETURN OF THE VAGABOND." George M. Cohan presents his new melodramatic satire in prologue and two acts. Staged by Sam Forrest; setting by Oden Waller. At the National Theater.

—THE CAST—

The Vagabond	Mr. Cohan
The Governor	McKay Morris
His Wife	Maria Louise Dana
His Daughter	Celeste Holm
His Son-in-law	John Morag
The Tavern Keeper	E. J. Blunkall
His Son	Fred Herrick
His Daughter-in-law, Gretchen	Davidson
The Italian	Joe Verdi
The Doctor	John Cherry
The Banker	Florenz Ames
The Sheriff	Edward McNamara
The Captain	Len Hollister
His Assistant	George Leach
A Stranger	Dona McClelland
A Little Stranger	George Thornton
Another Stranger	Marshall Bradford
The Coachman	Henry Sherwood
The Cop	George W. Smith

Once more assuming his enigmatic role of The Vagabond, made famous in his earlier play of "The Tavern," George M. Cohan last night romped through two acts of "The Vagabond Returns," its sequel, to the evident amusement of an enthusiastic audience of faithful Cohan adherents in the National Theater.

In the process of romping through what he is pleased to denominate an "American melodramatic satire," Mr. Cohan kids the life out of hoary stage traditions, the characters in his play, its lines, the audience and himself. Interlarding his clowning with a little sage philosophy, an abundant regard for human virtue and a pitiles aversion to evil, the author-actor-producer lends his rollicking charade a substance that is not always farcical.

A brief prologue, which Mr. Cohan calls an "Introductory," serves to establish the fact that it is the same old tavern, in for another stormy evening of unpredictable and baffling events, with the same characters involved. These weird happenings do not get up full steam—or any steam at all to speak of—until that strange storm of dry rain, snow and dust, with its vivid lightning and crashing thunder, blows up suddenly as the precursor of The Vagabond's arrival to see that nothing untoward happens to The Governor and his family, making their first visit to the wayside inn since their original meeting there with the Perfect Stranger in "The Tavern." Once Vagabond Cohan is on the scene, things begin to happen, with a cumulative succession of melodramatic episodes in the second act that far exceed the excitement of those in the first.

Star Steals His Own Show

Despite the fact that he is surrounded by a large and able cast, led by McKay Morris, in the role of The Governor, the star is his own whole show. He spouts grandiose speeches, dances a little, sings occasionally, makes some atrocious plays on words, executes a fair measure of "mugging" and indulges all of the Cohan mannerisms that have become so much beloved in the American theater through the years.

The occasions for all this are many. There is a trio of desperate bank robbers loose in the neighborhood, with $250,000 worth of loot in their possession; The Governor's daughter has become the bride of a neurotic young man, who needs a bit of straightening out; the Doctor, summoned to attend him, finds himself also the victim of the yeggs, who have stolen his horse and buggy; the tavern-keeper's son is bulldozed by his martinet father and married to an unsympathetic young wife, who resents his ambition to become an actor; the local constabulary stands in need of a little corrective treatment, too, and altogether The Vagabond has his hands full bringing everything out right side up.

Bizarre Characters Well Played

Cohan's performance is one such as he alone could give. One or two of his stage tricks grow a bit monotonous, but his performance, nevertheless, is one of such variety as to quiet any critical carping. McKay Morris plays The Governor straight and both looks and sounds as a Governor might, caught in any such strange combination of circumstances. A particularly charming portrayal is contributed by Celeste Holm, as his newly wedded daughter. His wife is austerely and effectively played by Marie Louise Dana. E. J. Blunkall, as the tavern-keeper, and Fred Herrick, his son, do much for the comedy's sturdier moments. The remainder of the cast is fully up to the bizarre characters they are called upon to impersonate.

"The Return of the Vagabond" may not repeat the furore of "The Tavern," but it is typical George M. Cohan and that always is good theater.

New Saroyan Play Raises Old Question

Author Ignores Form But Is Amusing And Sentimental

By Richard L. Coe

Although the prevailing Child Labor Law automatically prohibited a Washington engagement of William Saroyan's new play, "Love's Old Sweet Song," and although the Baltimore reviewers were anything but kind to it, the New York Drama Critics' Circle has again postponed voting on its "best play of the season" until after the comedy opens in Manhattan Thursday evening. The new Robert E. Sherwood drama, "There Shall Be No Night," which Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne played on E street last week to packed houses, was the reason for the first of two postponements.

Viewed Saturday evening in Ford's Theater, Baltimore, the Saroyan comedy again brought up the current question, "What Is a Play?" which is the point at which the Baltimore reviewers smacked the Saroyan opus on the bean. Whatever it is, however, this sentimental comedy has scenes that are uproariously funny and a bewildering tenderness that was such an important quality of "Heavenly Express." Anything goes in "Love's Old Sweet Song" and this writer loved it. Walter Huston, Jessie Royce Landis, Arthur Hunnicutt and Peter Fernandez are happily cast in the leads.

There is, for instance, Cabot Yearling, a family man, his wife and their 14 children, resting on a front lawn belonging to a roseate spinster lady, on their fight from the dust of Oklahoma to the orchards of California. This outrageous burlesque of the Joad family is accompanied by a photographer from Life and a well-educated novelist who would write their story. Into their paradise eventually steps a Dartmouth man, selling subscriptions to Time magazine. As an inducement he rolls off trippingly on the tongue the names of all Time's writers, among them Sidney Olsen, former day city editor of The Post. Cabot subscribes by marking his "x."

Such an episode is but one of many. What form there is to the play is still in a state of flux. The third act was very weak, probably being rewritten in the course of Saturday night's performance. There is next to no chance that the play will get the coveted award. But, play or no play, it kept its Theater Guild audience in laughter, or suspense, and pop-eyed wonder.

Use New Device For Action Photos

Still photographers at Universal studios have, in the past few weeks, resorted to ingenious and even daring means to grab close-up pictures of actors in action.

Gordon Head, studio still man, applied the same principle to obtain action shots on two productions.

For a thrilling sequence in "Winners of the West," in which a train crashes into a wagon loaded with explosives, Head donned black clothing and had himself and his camera wired to the side of the engine. From that point he was able to obtain close-up action stills, and while he was in range of the movie camera the black clothing provided a perfect camouflage.

On being assigned to "Ski Patrol," drama of the war in the Arctic, Head adopted the same method. He wore a white ski cape and covered his camera with white, and thus was able to snap pictures of skiers in action.

Hollywood, April 29 (INS).—Luise Rainer, who left Hollywood right after she was nominated Academy winner a second time, is returning. Luise comes at the invitation of Columbia to make a test for "Hot for Paris," a remake of a French picture "Gribouille," which was bought intact. You may be sure the job is practically Luise's or I don't think she would have accepted Columbia's offer to come all this way to make a test.

The case of Luise Rainer is one of the most interesting in this fantastic business, in that she and Bette Davis are the only feminine stars to have won the Academy awards more than once. Luise was looked upon as a top star but, after one or two bad pictures, interest in her seemed to wane. Charles Vidor, who did such a sensational job directing "My Son, My Son!" will direct "Hot for Paris."

She comes here to go to work in Anna Neagle's forthcoming picture "Come Into My Parlor," an original by Alice Duer Miller, and the amazing Neagle gal will play a modern Cinderella.

Wally Beery has changed more than anyone I know in Hollywood this past year, and I may add, all for the better. He and Noah are reconciled after a feud lasting for years and he's really been a swell pal to the newlyweds, Noah Berry, jr., and his bride. Wally has had a lot of trouble in the past years, so maybe he's more sympathetic to the problems of others. Anyway, he's still going great guns at M-G-M, where he is still a top star after 12 years. They've lined up "Wyoming" for him, an original by Jack Jevne, and it's a Civil War opus. Dick Thorpe will direct.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Deanna Durbin and Vaughn Paul, despite rumors, have not yet selected a site for their new home and have made no definite matrimonial plans; Bobby Stack and Judy Garland are closer than ham and eggs; Broadway is paging Eddie Albert for "Windy Holleran," a play. Keep your eye on Jane Withers.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Mary Haworth's Mail

Secretly Wed in Elopement, Youngsters Are Stunned By Emergency Prospect of Having to Support Boy's Deserted Family; 'Crazy With Worry,' They Ask Help

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been going with a young man for two years. About a month ago we eloped. He is 21 and I am 20. We planned to keep our marriage a secret until September, by which time we expected to have enough money saved to buy our furniture and take a small apartment. Both of us work. He makes $1 620 a year with the Government and I get $15 a week from a business firm. Both of us have prospects of advancement and we are good money managers.

Our biggest problem is his family. He comes from a small town out West and has three younger sisters and a younger brother. Since coming here, he has sent money home regularly. Just last week he sent $10. Two days ago he received a letter from the eldest girl (aged 19) saying their father has gone off, leaving the family to shift for itself. He does this periodically, it seems; going off for months at a time, after which he returns and expects the family to support him. He's too lazy to work and never has been a real father to his children.

A second sister, aged 18, is the only one at home with a job. Their mother keeps a boarding house. Their combined earnings amount to about $90 a month, and their expenses are nearly twice that. Now, the sisters think if the mother were to come here to live with her older son, and the youngest sister (aged 8) were put in a convent school, they could manage for themselves and the younger brother, who is 17.

This is the first time in my life I've ever faced any problem like this. My family is moderately well off. We have a lovely home and have always had anything we wanted. Now they see us worrying and cannot understand what's wrong, as I've never told them a thing. What can we do? The boy is nearly crazy with worry, and it breaks my heart to see him like this. We had planned so much, but now we're scared. We don't know what to do. We would be forever grateful for any helpful sugestion.

TROUBLED.

Unexpected Blow Can Be Survived

DEAR TROUBLED: I like your spirit, which shines between the lines of your letter to tell me that you are a fine person; an exceptionally gallant young lady. If your husband is of equal caliber (and I think he must be, considering his responsible attitude toward his family), together you will survive this unexpected blow somehow, and yet claim the successful and happy life you had so confidently planned.

It's too late now, of course, to dwell on the unwisdom of impetuous elopements. You know from experience how much mental distress they are likely to unleash upon the participants, and how painful it is to face the prospect of having to admit that one has—to all appearances—made a grave mistake, when one's heart argues otherwise, yet lacks concrete evidence to support the belief.

I believe you must, at the very least, take the boy's family into your confidence. It is possible, constructively viewed, that the premature marriage may prove to have been his salvation—in the sense of forcing his family to stand more on its collective feet and hang less on his neck. While it is understandable that his mother in her tired panic (or his sisters, in their confused, hurried planning in emergency), would have turned to him in just the way they have—it is also clear that if once he let himself in for the proposition of making a home for his mother, his chances of marrying and establishing a home of his own would have been greatly reduced and indefinitely deferred.

Also, it is logical to think that his family, once they have reconciled themselves to the irrevocable, will rally and somehow work out their problem for themselves in their own community, drawing upon their own resources. If his mother were to come here, in all likelihood she would become primarily dependent upon this one son's bounty—which would be as uncomfortable for her as for him; and detrimental, as well, to the initiative of the others. Yet if she stays where she is, amongst old friends, neighbors and acquainances, she can in all probability do more for herself and her children—and they for her—than could be managed if she uprooted herself.

It is to your husband's credit that his conscientious sense of responsibility to his family has him "nearly crazy" with worry in this crisis. But he has a responsibility to himself, as well—and now, of course, a responsibility to his wife. In the normal course of human events, it is to be expected—indeed, it is proper and right, that a young man should marry. In bringing children into the world, parents should visualize this experience for them, as an inalienable part of their identification with life. And so your husband should not feel too guilty that he has taken a wife—even though prematurely, overconfidently and, as it happens, at fortuitous inconvenience to his blood kin.

So my advice—directed more at your husband than yourself—is to tell his family about his secret marriage and his plan to set up housekeeping in a few months. Let him also say what a grand girl he has married, and how, with her help, he expects to get ahead much faster in the world than he might have as a bachelor. He can assure them of the continuance of his customary remittance; and give them his moral support and constructive suggestions as to how to get back on their feet in their own locality.

Whether to tell your family is another matter. Ordinarily, it is best to keep no important secrets from one's parents. The average parents turn out to be better friends than a youngster would believe when he must confront them with a worried admission of disappointing behavior. While I feel it might be unsporting to dump your problem in their lap, as one for them to help solve, I also think your marriage is a fact that they are entitled to know. But if you anticipate from them a hysterically scandalized or bitterly censorious reaction, it might be best to postpone the telling until the boy has his "home" situation straightened out. There is no point in bringing more pressure to bear on his current anxiety.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, April 29.

OUR NOTED avenue store has made its four annual awards to American designers, and one of the foursome to win the $1,000 and scroll was an attractive and clever young lady who is an heiress to the Chinasi tobacco millions. Wonder if she'll donate the grand to an unworthy cause—like me, say?

ALICE HUGHES

The girl is Altina Sanders, who designed the Harlequin glasses already popular—giving the wearers a roguish and sirenish look I went to see the lady the other day, and learned that the design was actually born of disgust with the paintings of young beauties in specs that she saw in opticians' windows. The eyeglasses outraged her sense of form, as an artist from girlhood. Eyes aren't round, but oval, she realized, and by giving glasses an upward tilt at the outside corners, they would be both practical, but more attractive. So the Harlequin was born that way.

Mrs. Sanders, 30, the mother of two, tells me she thought of the new glasses as functional, and not as merely pert and attractive. Much to her surprise, they caught on for smartness when introduced last September, and considerably to her surprise, she stands to make quite a chunk of loot from their sale. They are already licensed to many manufacturers, and Mrs. Sanders rates a royalty on every pair sold.

Her once-placid library is now a busy office, and she has to divide her time between the glass business and her two sons. She looks much more like an attractive member of the younger married set than a booming business woman.

The other three winners were Henry Dreyfuss and Ray Patten, industrial designers, and Bill Joyce, jr., of Hollywood, designer of sports and playshoes. But our side did all right, with the prosperous and talented Altina Sanders, who gave all lady spectwearers a chance to look pleasantly mephistophelian.

If it is true, as Mh. Cholly Maury Paul Knickerbocker says, that Doris Duke and Jimmy Cromwell will be parents come August, it will be the biggest international event since the birth of Baba Hutton's boy, Lance, and 100-gun salutes will undoubtedly be fired at all army coasts in the land. What with La Duke's famed distaste for the camera, the photographer who manages to get a shot at the infant will undoubtedly rate a big bonus from the boss

Pastels Now Walk in the Rain

It's only those possessing drab, dreary rain clothes—or none at all—who greet with dismay lowering skies and the patter of raindrops. However, the new pastel rain outfits carry cheer on the darkest of days. With April showers showing a tendency to carry on into summer, a wise investment would be a raincoat and hat set such as the one worn above by Frances Keele. It is as kind on slim budgets as it is good looking. Both the jaunty stitched hat and raincoat are priced well under $10. The colors of this cotton gabardine set are joyful looking on drizzly days—rose, a delicate seafoam green and aqua. Note the roomy, convenient pockets and trim, close-fitting collar.

Slim Figure May Become Job Requisite

By Ida Jean Kain

THE DAY may come when slimness is as necessary a qualification for employment as a typing speed of 60 words per minute, mastery of the decimal mystery in filing, or a degree from Teachers' College.

The possibility that weight and its range of variation may some day appear as routine questions on the application blank is foreshadowed by the surprising case of the New York school teacher. After the board of education had finished checking her record, there seemed to be no doubt that avoirdupois does not pay.

In the 33½ years of her service, she had been tardy 724 times and absent 1,556 days. All told, it was estimated that she had lost about eight years' work. In this case, both employe and employer had sustained a loss financially.

Teacher Weighed 275

The only excuse for absence recognized by the big red schoolhouse is sickness. Therefore, we take it for granted that the employe in point had recourse to this same explanation for her numerous absences. But the fact that she tipped the scales at 275 pounds would explain any number of allegations of illness! Excessive weight is generally regarded by the health-conscious as a detracter from vitality and longevity.

Not very many women permit themselves to become so excessively overweight. Nevertheless, the weight trend is in direct contradiction to the laws of health. The available statistics show the average gain to be: Three pounds between the ages of 25 and 30; seven pounds between 30 and 40; six pounds between 40 and 50. The total average gain is 16 pounds of overweight by the age of 50.

But such statistics are based on the weight gains of the overweights who remain healthy. The excessive overweights are excluded. The estimate is far too low. But whatever the amount you have gained during the periods mentioned, remember this: To keep your vitality at its highest, you should not gain more than 10 pounds in 20 years.

As a matter of medical record, a slight decrease in weight with the birthdays has been found much more compatible with health and a long life.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

DeGoofey Offensive

HEARTENED by the support of her followers, Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey is waging an aggressive fight to retain the presidency of the Do Something About It League.

Mrs. DeGoofey

At her press conference yesterday, the famous reformer announced that she had received letters and telegrams from all parts of the country pledging support to her campaign against Mrs. Marmaduke Wadd, widow of the nut cup tycoon.

"Let Mrs. Wadd have the backing of the Wall Street wives, if she wants it," said Mrs. DeGoofey. "For my part I will take the plain women—no, no, I don't mean plain, I mean ordinary—no, not that either. What I really mean is that I have the support of the true 100 per cent American women who do not eat lobster thermidor or wear triple silver fox scarves."

Mrs. Gimlet On the Ticket

Mrs. DeGoofey also announced that Mrs. Gussie Gimlet had agreed to run on her ticket for first vice president. Mrs. Gimlet will oppose Mrs. Silas Hardpann, wealthy socialite who is the running mate of Mrs. Wadd.

Mrs. Gimlet

"Unlike Mrs. Wadd," said Mrs. DeGoofey, "I am not seeking to bolster up my ticket by the names of wealthy and ineffectual socialites. Mrs. Gimlet has been put on my ticket, not for her money, or even hear beauty—but for her efficiency as a reformer. I defy anyone to produce the man or woman—especially the man—that Mrs. Gimlet cannot reform.

"Mrs. Gimlet's record speaks for itself. We have her largely to thank for the disappearance of the snood, for the decline of the ankle bracelet on platinum blondes, for the fight against tiger-skin bathing suits on men, for countless contributions to our moral and esthetic welfare.

"Moreover, should any foreign crisis arise in connection with the league's activities, I feel that Mrs. Gimlet is the one woman who could be sent abroad to deal with Hitler."

Campaign Song Is Contributed

Mrs. DeGoofey further announced her adoption of a campaign song sent her by Frances Turner, of Arlington, Va. "I am deeplly grateful to Miss Turner for helping me in this way," she said, "and I am going to have this song sung at all my party rallies." Following is the song:

If things don't please you,
And there's nothing you can do,
Just say—"something ought to be done about it."

From the smallest little thing,
To the moving of a ring,
"Something ought to be done about it."

If it's a hairpin you can't find,
Or your business you can't mind,
"Something ought to be done about it."

If you're too fat or you're too thin,
Call your doctor again and again,
"Something ought to be done about it."

If your personal results are meager,
Just join the good old leaguer
And say, "Something ought to be done about it."

When we all campaign together,
We'll raise such a great big duther
That our opponents had ruther
Join our cry—something ought to be done about it!"

"Are you making any election promises, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a political reporter.

Well, of course, I am standing on the platform of the Do Something About It League, which is pledged to the retention of the short skirt, the elimination of the overnight guest, the abolishment of the reading of minutes at club elections, and many other needed reforms. But particularly in this campaign I am promising women a new deal in hats. They have'nt had a break in the last five years. I am also promising a new deal in bridge prizes, cocktail canapes, and in summer housecoats. And I emphatically promise to do something about the way men gang up together at parties——"

"Just a minute, Mrs. DeGoofey," interrupted a cub reporter, "how do you expect to carry out your promises?"

"Young man," replied Mrs. DeGoofey, "you forget that this is only the campaign. I do not cross my bridges until I come to them."

Miss Fisk, Albert Dewey Announce Engagement

Miss Eunice Russell Willson to Become Bride of Lieut. Robert Henry Rice, U. S. N., In Ceremony at Annapolis on Sunday

With the first hint of spring—as the poets know it—comes news of romance with a capital R. Telegrams have arrived here telling of the engagement and forthcoming marriage of one of society's favorites, Albert Dewey, to Miss Felicia Fisk.

Although Mr. Dewey has made his home in New York City since his divorce from Mrs. Ffoulke Dewey last summer, he pops in on Washington parties with a great deal of regularity. Both he and his fiancee were on hand last week for the gay dance given by Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock in their Georgetown home.

The future Mrs. Dewey is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur L. Fisk, who make their home at 65 East Ninety-sixth street in New York City. Although she is known only casually here, Miss Fisk is reported to possess a great deal of charm and vivacity. Petite, she has that happy combination of blond hair and snapping brown eyes. At the Fahnestock dance she was smartly turned out in a filmy pink frock trimmed in yards of black lace. One of her first appearances in Washington society was at the party given late last winter by Mr. and Mrs. G. Grant Mason in honor of Publisher Henry Luce and his bonnie wife, Claire Boothe Luce.

Mr. Dewey From Chicago

MR. DEWEY, who originally came from Chicago, is the brother of Charles Dewey, one-time Ambassador to Poland and former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. The bridegroom-elect is a brother of socially prominent Mrs. Frederick Alger, the former Susanne Dewey.

With his first wife, the former Gwendoline Ffoulke-Smith, Mr. Dewey arrived in Washington some years ago to make his home. Two years ago they went to New York where they cut quite a swathe in cafe society. It was something of a shock to Washingtonians to learn last summer that Mrs. Dewey had gone to Reno. Since then she has maintained her home here. Mrs. Dewey, who is noted for her beauty, is small with raven-dark hair and eyes accented by creamy white skin. She entertains often at her spacious home on Massachusetts avenue. Recently her name has been romantically linked with that of James M. Beck.

Miss Willson Sets Date

Another bit of interesting news, with a romantic twist, has to do with Miss Eunice Russell Willson, daughter of the Rear Admiral and Mrs. Russell Willson. Miss Willson has set Sunday as the date for her wedding to Lieut. Robert Henry Rice U. S. N. in St. Andrew's Chapel at the Naval Academy in Annapolis. Admiral Willson was Naval Attache in London several years ago. At present he is with the fleet in the Pacific and consequently will be unable to attend his daughter's wedding.

However, Mrs. Willson has come East from Long Beach, Calif., for the ceremony. The bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Henry Hubbard Rice, of Lebanon Springs, N. Y., is here for the ceremony. Mrs. Willson, who has been visiting in Washington, Baltimore and Annapolis since her arrival in the East, will motor to Danville, Va., following the ceremony with Mr. and Mrs. Stanley C. Cunningham who will come up for the ceremony. After a short stay in Danville she will return to the West Coast on May 12. Mrs. Rice, who has been visiting in Washington for the past two months will return to New York after the ceremony.

Junior League Classes Ended

Members of the Junior League's public speaking class held their final meeting yesterday, followed by a luncheon. Under the guidance of Mrs. Hugh Butler, the students each made a speech.

Mrs. Robert Whitelaw Wilson presided. Among those present were Miss Cecil Lester Jones, president of the league; Mrs. Montgomery Blair, next year's president; Mrs. George Maurice Morris, Mrs. John Ward Cutler, Mrs. Bishop Hill, Miss Virginia Cook, and Mrs. Margaret Warren.

The members who gave speeches and their subjects, were Mrs. Merton Tice, "Saving Newspapers;" Mrs. James Parker Nolan, "Trees;" Mrs. Edward Page, "Problems Facing a Foreign Service Wife;" Mrs. William North Sturtevant, "Facing a Photographer;" Mrs. Albert Walker, "Oh, Johnny," and Miss Julie Camp, "Stately Homes of England."

The prize for the most improvement shown during the year were awarded to Mrs. Nolan, with Mrs. Page runner-up. Miss Camp was voted the best speaker, with Mrs. Wilson second.

Symphony Fund Drive Tea

The annual tea to open the National Symphony Orchestra's tenth annual sustaining fund campaign will take place on Monday at 4 o'clock at the Carlton Hotel. Mrs. George Hewitt Myers is chairman of the committee arranging the party.

Assisting Mrs. Myers, who is a member of the board of directors of the Orchestra Association, are Mrs. R. H. Dunlap, Mrs. John Rowland Hill, and Mrs. Mary Stewart. Senhora de Martins, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador, Miss Hary B. Adams, a member of the Symphony board, Mrs. Alfred Johnson and Mrs. Edward Burling will pour.

Approximately 700 volunteer workers will attend the tea, which will launch the ten-day drive to raise $107,600 necessary to provide for the National Symphony's 1940-1941 season. Campaign literature and information will be distributed to aid them in their solicitation of the 15,000 potential contributors in Washington and vicinity.

Mrs. Phillips Arrives in N. Y. On Way From Italy

Mrs. William Phillips, wife of the United States Ambassador at Rome, was among the passengers arriving in New York yesterday, aboard the United States liner Washington from Genoa and Naples. She is expected to come directly to Washington for a visit.

Brig. Gen. Sherman Miles, newly appointed Chief of Military Intelligence of the Army, also arrived on the Washington.

The United States consul at Stockholm and Mrs. Lynn W. Franklin were also among the 879 passengers on the ship. They will stop off in Washington en route to their home, Fall Hill, in Fredericksburg, Va., where they will join Mrs. Franklin's mother, Mrs. Frederick Robinson.

Dinner Parties To Precede Cohan Benefit Showing

Several dinner parties will precede tomorrow night's performance of George M. Cohan's "The Return of the Vagabond" for the benefit of the Bryn Mawr College Scholarship Fund.

Among those entertaining are Mrs. J. L. Houghteling and Mrs. Howell Moorhead. Ranking guests in Mrs. Moorhead's party will be Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone.

Following the performance, Arthur Bradley Campbell will give a supper at LaSalle Versailles for his two cousins, the Misses Isabelle and Marjorie Meuser, Miss Ellen Hewes Flowerree, Miss Elizabeth Kean, Robert Stewart, Nathan Bartlett and William FitzGerald.

Additional boxholders announced for tomorrow are Mrs. Thomas Richard Cowell, Mrs. Bruce Smith and Mrs. Edward B. Meigs.

Miss Rosanelli Becomes Bride

Of interest here is the wedding of Miss Concetta Rosanelli, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Luigi Rosanelli, of Waterbury, Conn., and Anthony Robert Barbuto, of Wallingford, Conn., which took place at Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Waterbury, on Saturday.

The Right Rev. Msgr. Joseph Valdambrini officiated. Spring flowers and ferns decorated the church.

Given in marriage by her uncle, Emil Rosanelli, the bride wore an antique ivory wedding gown of slim princesse lines. The heart-shaped neckline was plain with a tiny pleated satin ruff trimming the wide circular train. A long tulle veil fell from a tiara of orange blossoms. The bridal bouquet was of orchids and lilies of the valley.

Miss Marie Briscuso, of Washington, was maid of honor and wore a gown of Alice blue chiffon made in the new torso silhouette with a full skirt and elbow-length sleeves. She wore a tiny hat made of white lilacs and roses and carried a bouquet of delphinium.

Joseph Franchinelli, cousin of the groom, was best man, and the ushers were Henry Rosanelli and Paul Barbuto.

For traveling the bride chose a blush-rose ensemble with navy accessories. Upon their return they will make their home in Washington where Mr. Barbuto is affiliated with the Housing Authority and Mrs. Barbuto was connected with the Federal Housing Authority.

Wallaces to See French Movie

The Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry Wallace will join distinguished members of the Diplomatic Corps in previewing the French film "Harvest" at a benefit tonight at 9 p. m. at the Little Theater. This benefit, to raise funds for French civilian relief, is sponsored by the American Association of Teachers of French under the patronage of the French Ambassador, Count de Saint-Quentin.

Other figures in Washington official life who will attend the premiere are Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board and Mrs. Chester Davis, Assistant Chief of Protocol of the Department of State and Mrs. Stanley Woodward, Governor of the Virgin Islands and Mrs. Lawrence Cramer.

Heads of embassies expected to attend include the French Ambassador, the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki; the Belgian Ambassador, Count van der Straten-Ponthoz; the Rumanian Ambassador, Radu Irimescu, and the Minister of Yugoslavia, Constantin Fotitch. Also from the French Embassy will be Jacques Truelle, the Minister-Counselor; the Military Attache, Col. Emmanuel Lombard; the Naval Attache, Comdr. Pierre Benech; Secretaries Jacques Trumaine and Charles Lucet.

Elizabeth Waters, Woodrow Stotter to Wed

Mr. and Mrs. Artis Waters, of this city, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Waters, to Woodrow Stotter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thurman Richard Stotter.

The marriage will be in the fall. At present the prospective bridegroom is attending Benjamin Franklin University.

Bido Sayao To Be Honored At Reception

Senhora de Martins Compliments Singer With Embassy Party

Senhora de Martins, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador, has issued invitations to a reception tonight at the embassy at 11 o'clock in honor of Bidu Sayao, famous Brazilian singer.

Senhorita Sayao will appear tonight at a concert at the Pan American Union. She became a member of the Metropolitan Opera several seasons ago and has proved one of its biggest drawing cards. Petite, with black hair, she is one of the prettiest of the younger singers.

Tonight's concert will be attended by many prominent officials and diplomats, a large number of whom will go on to the reception at the Brazilian Embassy afterwards.

Another diplomatic party tonight is the dinner which the French Ambassador, Count Rene de Saint Quentin, will give. He will also entertain at luncheon on Thursday in honor of Jacques Maritain, distinguished French philosopher, who will lecture that evening at Georgetown University on "Postwar Problems in Europe."

38 Honored With Party

Entertaining at one of a series of luncheons before she leaves with her husband for Havana, Senora de Munilla, wife of the Military Attache of the Cuban Embassy, was hostess yesterday to a large group. The Munillas plan to leave for the island the first of June and will spend three months.

Senora de Munilla, wearing a street frock of pink crepe, received informally in the drawing room. It was a buffet luncheon served at small tables arranged in the drawing room, sunporch and libary. Spring bouquets of roses and snapdragons decked the tables, where the 38 guests were seated. Ranking guests were Senora de Alfaro, wife of the Ambassador of Ecuador, and Senora de Boyd, wife of the Ambassador of Panama.

Other guests were Senora de Baron, Mme. Ogawa and Mme. Sabur Isoda, of the Japanese Embassy; Senora de Godoy, Senhora de Araujo, Senora de Lecuna, Mme. Ricardo Alfaro, Mme. Akira Miyazaki, Senora de Berzunza, Mrs. Thomas Burke, Mrs. Alpheus Ryan, Mme. Oscar Albertini, Mrs. Maxwell Moorehead, Mrs. John Wesley Clark, Mrs. Dorothy Watson, Mme. Basil Toutorsky, Mrs. Eldon P. King, Mrs. Henry Cameron Macatee, Mrs. Henry Albers and Mrs. Arthur E. Cook.

Still others there were Mrs. William W. Smith, Mrs. M. X. Sullivan, Mrs. Charles H. Ruth, sr., Senora Maria Hermosa, Mrs. Trendly Dean, Mrs. Dell E. Yarnell, Mrs. Walter Wyatt, Miss Meredith Howard, Mrs. Mattie Wyatt Porter, Miss Margaret Hart, Mrs. Marie McNair and Mrs. Clarence Lee Miller.

Out-of-town guests at the luncheon included Mrs. Grace Dupree Ridings (Mrs. Alfred Lafayette Ridings), of Sherman, Tex., and Mrs. John T. H. Mitchell and her daughter of Greenwich, Conn., and New York. They will return to their home today but expect to come to Washington again for a few days next week.

Byrons Entertain Diplomatic Group At Dinner Party

Representative and Mrs. William deByron entertained at a dinner party last night when the ranking guest was the French Ambassador, Count de Saint-Quentin.

Other ranking guests included the Norwegian Minister and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne and the former Austrian Minister and Mme. Prochnik. Also at the dinner was Mrs. H. H. Rousseau, wife of Rear Admiral Rousseau who has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Byron. Mrs. Rousseau will leave tomorrow for her home in Connecticut.

Boyd Triplets Await Movie Test Results, Hope for Contract

Daughters of Ambassador From Panama Will Be Among the Entertainers to Help Merriment at Democratic Club Party

The Boyd triplets, daughters of the Ambassador from Panama and Senora de Boyd, are awaiting with lively interest the results of screen tests they made in New York last week. Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Pictures, supervised the tests and the triplets are hoping a contract will result.

The dark-eyed, lively sisters will be among the entertainers at the annual fete of the Woman's National Democratic Club at the Shoreham on Saturday from 3 to 6, to be outdoors if the weather permits. Mrs. Roosevelt will be the guest of honor.

Receiving with the First Lady will be Mrs. John Nance Garner, Mrs. Cordell Hull, Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Mrs. Harry Woodring, Mrs. Robert Jackson, Mrs. James A. Farley, Mrs. Charles Edison, Mrs. Harold Ickes, Mrs. Henry Wallace, Miss Frances Perkins, Mrs. Sumner Welles, Mrs. Daniel W. Bell, Mrs. Louis A. Johnson, Mrs. Francis Biddle, Mrs. W. W. Howes, Mrs. Lewis Compton, Mrs. Alvin Wirtz, Mrs. Claude Wickard, Mrs. Edward J. Noble, and Mrs. Charles V. McLaughlin.

Mrs. Hull is chairman of patronesses for the event. Sponsors include Mrs. Thurman Arnold, Mrs. Blair Banister, Mrs. William B. Bankhead, Mrs. Alben Barkley, Mrs. Ramsay S. Sullivan, Mrs. Millard Tydings and Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward.

Among the entertainment features at the fete will be a concert of the 121st Engineer Band of the District of Columbia under the leadership of Meyer Goldman. State songs for the parade of States, swing, popular, and serious airs will be played.

One of the facts learned about State songs since the Pageant of States has been in the making is that only 20 states have them. Many were adopted in the last decade. Among the States with songs are Texas, Idaho, Alabama, Louisiana, Kentucky and Iowa.

About the Town with DUDLEY HARMON

TAKE A PRETTY Polish exile, a Finnish advertising expert who manned a machine gun behind the Mannerheim line during the war, a foreign correspondent, an American ambulance driver recently wounded;; scramble them all together with several assorted countesses, New Dealers and two cave dwellers, and you have something right out of Robert Sherwood or Vincent Sheean. But in Washington you are apt to find them all merrily jumbled at one cocktail party.

THE ATTRACTIVE Polish girl, Natalia Aszkenazy, adorned the recent party given by the Lucius Wilmerdings for their house guests, Mr. and Mrs. Alex Cushing, of New York. As smart as she is ornamental, Miss Aszkenazy is a graduate of the University of Geneva and was formerly a member of the Polish foreign service. She is working at the embassy here and will set off May 15 for a series of lectures in Chicago. She is the daughter of a Polish big businessman and her family is now in France. Miss Aszkenazy happened to be in New York when the war broke out. Mrs. Charles Darlington, formerly of Washington, armed her with letters of introduction to friends here.

FROM MOSCOW to Helsinki to Stockholm to Washington is the hectic path recently traveled by the Norman Deuels. Mr. Deuel was head of the United Press office in the Soviet capital for five years, and then covered the Finnish war while Mrs. Deuel coped with the nervous jitters in Stockholm. The correspondent says that the sense of relief from dodging bombs is nothing compared to the pleasure of no longer living in a suitcase. Mrs. Deuel is house-hunting here while her husband gets acquainted with the staffs of the various embassies and legations.

AT THE FINNISH FRONT the Deuel stories were censored by one W. K. Latvila, but evidently there are no hard feelings, for the two seemed to enjoy their reunion very much at dinner here the other night. When not stationed behind a machine gun, Mr. Latvila's job was shepherding the foreign correspondents, who numbered nearly a hundred. Among his charges was the blond Martha Gellhorn. He is in this country on some official business, his first trip here having been last Spring with the Finnish trade delegation.

"It's going to be pretty difficult to get back again," Mr. Latvila says. Practically the only route left is across to Italy and through Germany to the Finnish Gulf and the gulf is a danger area these days."

THAT YOUNG MAN eating lunch in the sunshine on a Lafayette Park bench yesterday was Capt. John Hasey, youthful member of the American Volunteer Ambulance Corps with the French army. Though his arm was broken by a bomb splinter in Finland, he hopes to go to Norway as soon as transportation can be arranged. The young chauffeur spent the week-end in Washington with Nathan Bartlett, lunching with Minister Procope and visiting with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne after Saturday's performance of "There Shall Be No Night." The Lunts were particularly eager to check if the uniforms of the ambulance volunteers in their play matched Capt. Losey's, and, except for one detail, found them authentic.

TO RETURN TO THE Wilmerding cocktail party, one of the most festive of the spring season. Their old house in Georgetown has a wide veranda extending all the way along one side and overlooking one of the big gardens for which that part of Washington is famous. Hardier souls sat out there, while the others, still skeptical of spring, clung to a fire in the long living room.

Seen here and there: The hostess trying to organize a tennis match with Cuthbert Train and William Stewart, an out-of-town friend . . . Olin Dows telling friends he and his mother, Mrs. Tracy Dows, would be off shortly to their summer home at Rhinebeck . . . Countess van Rechteren Limpurg and Eddie Burling chatting on a sofa together . . . Mrs. Donald Hiss, in a smart high-crowned white hat and black suit, and Mrs. Creighton Peet wearing a hat she'd designed herself . . . Newspaperman John Hay, Keith Officer, Mme. Charles Lucet and several others.

ODDS AND ENDS: Robert Coe and Miss Helen Davis are among those entertaining at dinners before the Howe-Burling dance May 11 . . . Everybody felt cheered up when diplomatic relations were opened with Iceland, as the number of embassies and legations here has decreased steadily and depressingly. But it's reported that Iceland will limit its representation in this country to a consulate in New York.

Notes of Society

Official and Residential

The United States Minister to the Dominican Republic and Mrs. Robert Scotten will be guests of honor at a dinner tomorrow by Robert Coe. Later the party will join the dinner being held by Mrs. William Thomas at the 1925 F Street Club prior to her departure for Nevada.

Miss Mary Louise Marsh will return tomorrow from a long stay in Palm Beach and Nassau. She will spend the next week-end with Mr. and Mrs. E. Kenneth Jenkins, of Warrenton.

Baron and Baroness James Baeyens are in New York for a week.

Henry Grattan Doyle, dean of George Washington University, and Mrs. Doyle, will motor today to Williamsburg, Va., where Dean Doyle will address the annual spring initiation and dinner tonight of Phi Beta Kappa at the College of William and Mary. The William and Mary chapter is the "mother" chapter of Phi Beta Kappa. Dean Doyle is president of the George Washington University chapter. His subject tonight will be "The Defense of the Humanities."

Mrs. Frank Mulkern will give a luncheon tomorrow at the Shoreham for Mrs. Charles P. Keyser. There will be 20 guests.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles W. Cuthbertson have issued invitations to the celebration of their fiftieth wedding anniversary tonight from 8 to 11 at 2206 Evarts street.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene F. Burr and their daughter, Miss Mary Anne Burr, of South Woodside Park, Md., are spending a week in Worcester, Mass.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Joerissen and their daughter, Miss Kay Joerissen, have returned to Washington from Miami.

Miss Caroline Humphrey gave a luncheon Sunday for Mrs. Peggy Marsteller, of Arlington.

Col. and Mrs. R. C. Goetz, of Washington are spending two weeks at San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara, Calif.

Mrs. Van Vleck, Mrs. Cooke Seek A.A.U.W. Presidency

Slate Announced for Elections On May 20; Applied Arts Committee Sponsors Exhibition and Supper Party

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor.

May 20 the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women will elect its officers for the next two years. Nominations, announced in the May bulletin, issued today, are headed by Mrs. William C. Van Vleck and Miss Madge Lane Cooke, candidates for president.

Mrs. Van Vleck, who is now serving as president, is eligible for relection as she is completing the unexpired term of Mrs. Robert Olesen, who resigned a few months ago, when her husband, Dr. Olesen, of the Public Health Service, was transferred to New York City. Miss Cooke is chairman of the finance committee.

Other candidates presented by the nominating committe, of which Mrs. Clyde Hadley is chairman for offices to be filled this year include: For second vice president and coordinator of study groups, Mrs. James S. Meritt and Miss Ruby Nevins; for corresponding secretary, Mrs. Virgil Reed, and Miss Virginia Kinnard; for treasurer, Mrs. G. R. Wilhelm, who is now serving in that office and Mrs. Skipwith Coale; for director, Mrs. Lynn R. Edminster and Mrs. Frank Smith.

Yesterday, the applied arts committee of the branch, under the chairmanship of Miss Edith Allen, sponsored its annual exhibition and supper party. One of the unusual exhibits was a portrait of Mrs. Roosevelt by Anna Marie Ketchum. It is sketched from life but Mrs. Roosevelt did not knowingly sit for it. Miss Ketchum, attending various functions at which the First Lady has been guest speaker, has taken advantage of these opportunities to sketch her.

Mrs. Louis A. Bauer is represented by a study, "Our Ella," a picture of her colored maid, with her spectacles and red kerchief. She also had several still life subjects on display.

Mrs. Harold Fowler, sculptor member of the group, showed a painter plaster head, "Lenore," inspired by Edgar Allan Poe's "Raven."

Among the exhibits was a knitted linen lace cover in old continental pattern, done on round needles, to be used either as a cover or mantilla. It was the work of Mrs. I. D. Clarke.

Mrs. W. C. Harlee showed a sandwich plate of silver on copper, etched with family crests.

Mrs. Remington Kellogg had display of stencils, illustrating the dry brush technique, and Dr. Allen had arranged an exhibition showing the progressive stages of pottery making. There were also flower arrangements, including a particularly artistic bowl of narcissi by Miss Irma Brown.

Mrs. David Wing was hostess for tea in the afternoon. Speakers at the program following the supper were Miss Bess Edwards, assistant director of home demonstration work in Texas; Miss Bernice Clayton, home improvement specialist, and Miss Maysie Malone, home demonstration agent of Brown County, Tex., and Mrs. Louise Hall-Hollis, of the Cabin Crafters.

Garden Party Planned At Belmont House

The National Woman's Party will give an informal May Day reception in the garden of Alva Belmont House, its headquarters, from 4 to 6 p. m. tomorrow. Miss Winifred Willard will present a dramatized review of "Uncle Lancy for President," by Ethel Hueston, who will be an honor guest at the affair.

Miss Mary Elizabeth Downey is chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements. The affair will be the first garden party of the season at Alva Belmont House.

Sky-Top Fair Tonight

The Sky-top Fair, a spring carnival sponsored tonight by the Washington League of Women Shoppers, will be preceded by many dinner parties given by members of the league. Among the hostesses taking their guests to the Hotel Washington roof for the carnival are Mrs. Mordecai J. Ezekiel, president of the Washington League.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

MARJORIE WEAVER, who is appearing in person at the Capitol Theater this week, will be guest of honor today at a tea being given by the active and alumnae chapters of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority from 4:30 to 6 at the chapter rooms, 2129 G street.

Mrs. Raleigh Gilchrist is chairman of the committee arranging the party in honor of Miss Weaver as one of Kappa Kappa Gamma's most famous members. She was a member of Delta Chapter at the University of Indiana.

To Congress—Mrs. C. D. Lowe, president of the District Congress of Parents and Teachers, leaves today for Omaha to attend the annual convention of the national congress. She goes instructed to oppose the proposed change in the name of the congress to "the National Parent-Teacher Association" and also to ask the organization's support of suffrage for the District.

She will present the matter of duplicate State and National dues to the convention, hoping that official action can be taken whereby the matter of affiliation in more than one local unit may be cleared up.

Mrs. Lowe will be a member of the discussion group led by Miss Ellen Lombard, chairman of home education, acting as recorder for the conference, and has also been made a member of the findings committee for the convention. She has been asked to report on the activities of the District congress at the meeting of the Founders' Day committee.

SOROPTIMIST PARTY—Hoping for fair weather, the Soroptimist Club of Montgomery County is planning a wistaria tea next Sunday from 4 to 6 at the Countryside School, 9401 Georgia avenue, Silver Spring, as a club benefit. The school is the home of Mrs. Lucille Miller, the principal, and the gardens are particularly beautiful at this season.

Anna Peck is chairman of the tea, assisted by Mrs. Miller, Mrs. A. B. Bowie, Mrs. Grace Ryan and Mrs. Florence Crossan.

JUNE CONVENTION—And while we're on the subject of the Soroptimists, the Washington club will be represented at the biennial convention of the American federation in Salt Lake City, June 17-20. It has voted to send the president, Mary Bourke, and Daisy Reed, past president, as delegates, with Mrs. Lorraine Good and Estelle Zirkin.

ELECT OFFICERS—Delta Delta Delta alumnae have elected following officers to serve during the year beginning May 1: President, Mrs. James S. Hathcock; vice president, Mrs. Frank Wal-

DONOR LUNCHEON—The Sisterhood of Beth-El Congregation will have its second annual donor luncheon tomorrow at the Rumanian Inn. Mrs. Mae Lastfogel is president of the sisterhood and Mrs. Sylvia Loewy, chairman of the luncheon.

Virginia Women To Hear Mrs. Beggs

Mrs. Frederick Beggs, of Paterson, N. J., chairman of international relations for the General Federation of Women's Clubs, will address Virginia clubwomen assembled for the twenty-third annual convention of the Virginia State Federation tonight at Old Point Comfort, Va. She will outline plans for the trip to South America being sponsored by the federation this summer.

A meeting of the executive committee of the federation last night and today will precede the formal opening of the convention tomorrow at the Chamberlain Hotel. Miss V. Lucille Bland, of West Point, State president, is presiding at the sessions.

Robert W. Porterfield, director of the Barter Theater of Abingdon, will talk tomorrow afternoon on "Fine Arts" and tomorrow night Felix Morley, editor of The Post and president-designate of Haverford College, is scheduled to speak.

Beta Sigma Phi's Banquet Tonight

The District council and the local chapters of Beta Sigma Phi will celebrate founder's day with a formal banquet, to be held at 7:45 p. m. tonight at Hotel 2400, Sixteenth street northwest. Winfred Ericson and Lois Nater, of Eta; Emma Wooten, of Delta;; Hilda Hess, of Lambda and Maxine Siman have charge of plans.

Preceding the dinner, the pledge ritual will be given by Miss Margaret Camburn, of Philadelphia, international tribune, assisted by Irene Stevenson, of Theta; Ruth Gilbert, of Gamma, and escorts from local chapters. The members to be initiated are Marie Delay, for Gamma; Majorie Baker, Magdalyn Burkehartsmeier, Florence Huhn, Edith Perkins and Mary Wilkins, for Epsilon; Eleanor Harding and Joyce Morrison, for EEta; Sally Fowler and Bernita Nichols, for Theta, and Wilhelmina Sharpe, Patty McGrath and Mary Fowler, for Kappa. Ruth Hill, District of Columbia Council president, will welcome the new members.

Gen. Fries Scores Laxity In Education

Wheel of Progress Told Three Rs Must Be Made Attractive

Lax methods in "so-called progressive education" were scored last night by Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries (retired) in an address before the Wheel of Progress at the Washington Hotel.

Introduced by Mrs. Margaret Hopkins Worrell, president of the society, Gen. Fries, asserted it was ridiculous to assume that children were capable of choosing what they should learn as though they had more wisdom than their elders. They can learn by play, but it takes ten times as long, he said, and results of the system are illustrated by high school students who can neither spell, write, punctuate nor understand English grammar.

The "musts" in the school curriculum such as the three R's should be made as attractive as possible and they should be drilled into the student so he will master them as a basis for whatever line he follows later, said Gen. Fries.

He contrasted the Spartan nature of the German youth movement, which has trained young Germans for leadership during the last 20 years, with the easy-going methods of "progressive education" here. The recent military successes of Germany are partly due to this hardening process its youth has had and the leadership it has developed, he said.

He criticized the Children's Crusade being carried on in the schools and asserted that two plays written by its originator, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, for production in schools instilled in the young people disrespect for the framers of the Constitution and for parental authority.

Mrs. Mary McFarland Blessner sang "Our Country's Flag," written by Mrs. Mary Sitz Parker, who accompanied her. There were also readings by Miss Lois Boylan and solos by Mrs. Amy Albia Bustin, accompanied by Miss Ruby Dean, of Arlington.

Art Classes Visit Exhibit

The art classes of Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School yesterday afternoon visited the annual exhibition sponsored by the fine arts section of the Woman's Club of Bethesda.

The three-day show opened Sunday afternoon with a tea at the clubhouse on Old Georgetown and Sonoma roads.

There are 55 pictures, all the work of artists of the District and nearby Maryland. They were hung Saturday by Mrs. Hugh B. Johnston, chairman of the section, assisted by Mrs. Fred Keplinger. The display continues today. Also shown Sunday were examples of metal work in silver, copper and aluminum by Mrs. Roy Palmer, of Somerset; of silver and gourds brought from South America by Mrs. Paul Ledig, a former member of the club, and of ceramics by Kathleen Wheeler (Mrs. W. R. H. Crump), of Somerset. These were on exhibition only for the day.

The exhibitions were started by Mrs. Edwin Etz, a member of the club who is also active in the Arts Club. She continued in charge of them for eight years. Discontinued for the past two years, the exhibition was resumed this season under Mrs. Johnston's chairmanship. Mrs. Etz was unable to assist as she is now on a trip to South America.

Nats' Streak Is Broken by Yankees, 5 to 4

RED ROLFE POISED FOR A WILD THROW TO FIRST BASE ON JOHNNY WELAJ'S BUNT. JIMMY POFAHL SCORED ON THE ERROR

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Somehow, we are beginning to rebel at the rising tide of anti-Jimmy Wasdell sentiment among Griffith Stadium customers. A pretty good little guy has been getting a harsh sort of deal from a noisy and unfeeling bloc of Washington fans. He hasn't been mulcting any widows and orphans. His only crime was his failure to hit.

POVICH

Last year Wasdell was released by the Nats because his fielding was something less than desired. He set a new American League record of four errors by a first baseman in one game, but the fact that in that same game he made three truly brilliant plays went officially unrecorded. This season he hasn't made a defensive mistake, but the hostility would not down. Fans seized upon his batting slump as an excuse for their boos.

When the Nats brought Zeke Bonura from the Giants the other day, the popular belief was that it was curtains for Wasdell with the Washington club. But it isn't. Wasdell is going to be retained, and we are venturing the prophecy that he'll finish the season as the club's No. 1 first baseman.

"I'm a lousy hitter in the spring and always have been," Wasdell was saying yesterday as Zeke Bonura ambled to first base to practice with the regular infield. "I was afraid of this batting slump. The first year I was in organized baseball, I made only one hit in my first 96 times at bat for Zanesville, but I ended up leading the league.

"It was the same down in the Southern Association. With Nashville I couldn't buy a hit during the first month of the season and ended up batting .340. When Washington sent me to Chattanooga a couple of years ago, I couldn't hit until the middle of May, but I finished up leading the team at bat.

"I don't know what the answer is. I guess there are just spring hitters and guys who can't hit in the spring. But I can play that bag, and my hitting is bound to pick up. They were getting ready to bench me at Minneapolis last summer when I finally got my eye on the ball. I finished up hitting 29 home runs and batting .329 in 109 games."

Wasdell hasn't been getting the best of the breaks since Washington bought him four years ago. There was little chance for him to break in with the Nats what with Joe Kuhel playing first base, and his purchase by Washington merely deprived him of a chance to go to the Giants, who needed a first baseman badly and had bid high for him.

With less than two weeks of the season passed, Wasdell is already labeled as a flop, but with a better break he might have been with the Brooklyn Dodgers aiming at the convenient fences in the Brooklyn park. Last winter, after Wasdell had starred for Minneapolis, Larry McPhail made Owner Mike Kelley an offer for Wasdell.

Kelley, however, couldn't sell Wasdell to the Dodgers because he was still the property of the Washington club. By telephone Kelley offered Clark Griffith $20,000 for Wasdell, the figure the Nats had paid for him a few years before. He was safe in making that offer inasmuch as Brooklyn had agreed to pay $35,000 for the first baseman, whom they intended to convert into an outfielder. At Minneapolis, Wasdell played only a few games at first base.

Only 24 years old, Wasdell does too many things well to cause Griffith to part with him. He is one of the few men in the league who had the speed to score from first with the winning run on Gerald Walker's ninth-inning double against the A's the other day. His batting averages in the high minors attest that he can hit pretty good pitching. In fact, when he was released by the Nats last season, he was hitting .305.

It was panic more than any other item that caused Griffith to buy Bonura back from the Giants. Negotiations were started immediately after the Washington club had lost four straight and the Nats' owner was frantic to bolster his team. The Bonura deal would never have been made if the Nats had won a fair share of their early games. Griffith was willing to bear with Wasdell, but he had to make a showing toward remedying the embarrassing situation of the Nats and thus came Bonura.

Griffith has been telling Wasdell that he will be given a chance to play the outfield, but Wasdell doesn't want to play the outfield, particularly. He wants to play first base, and if his hitting is deemed good enough to earn him an outfield job, he surely rates another shot at first base where he has not yet made a misplay. Anyway, tab him. He'll be back on first base or we'll retract all this.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, April 29.—The two most famous winning streaks in years—Brooklyn's and Bimelech's—reach the crucial stage tomorrow. Brooklyn, after completely conquering the Eastern clubs, goes up against the toughest team in the league, Cincinnati. Bimelech, winner of seven straight, meets some of the company he's going to keep in the Derby when he runs in that 1-mile tune-up race at Churchill Downs.

CONSIDINE

We have an idea that Brooklyn's will be the first streak to break. The Dodgers have been playing some great ball, but five of its eight victories have been scored against the two worst teams in the league, the Phillies and the Bees. The other victories were belted out of the Giants, who are something less than inspiring this year. From now on it is going to be a rockier road, for after Cincinnati comes the Cards, the Cubs and the Pirates. No round-heels in that bunch!

Bimelech isn't in there with much tomorrow. Col. Bradley's big fellow should romp home, although it was in this same race two years ago that Stagehand was licked—at a time when Stagehand was being handed the Derby with almost as much resignation as the boys are handing it now to Bimelech. A couple days after Stagehand's defeat he came down with a hacking cough, and never was the same after that.

We don't remember any ball club's ever developing as much early season steam as the Dodgers have displayed. Their competition might have been a little more severe, but nonetheless they are playing the kind of baseball that looks simply invincible. The pitchers pitch well, the hitters bang the ball in the clutches, the infield comes up with double plays when they most hurt the opposition, and the boys are running the bases with extreme fervor.

Two of them were caught at home plate in the first game of last week-end's skirmish with the Giants. And that's not necessarily bad third-base coaching. Under the circumstances, that was good take-a-chance baseball. It took perfect plays to catch those runners—and Leo Durocher has been around long enough to know that the opposition comes up with slightly imperfect plays a lot more often than perfect ones. In short, this is the best Brooklyn team in 20 years.

Speaking of the best-in-years, a surprising number of horsemen will tell you that Bimelech was a better 2-year old than Man O' War. Of course Big Bim batted a thousand as a 2-year-old—six starts, six wins. Man o' War's average was .900. He ran ten times as a 2-year-old, won nine times, finished second the other time.

Bimelech was pressed only once last year. That was in the Hopeful at Saratoga. He beat Andy K. by a neck after breaking ninth. His other triumphs were by, respectively, three lengths, six lengths, three lengths, a length and a half and four lengths. The men who saw it are still marveling at the way he ran in his final race as a 2-year old. It was the mile and sixteenth Pimlico Futurity. At the end he looked as if he could have run another mile at the same speed.

Like Bimelech, who will have to meet Mioland, pride of the West, next Saturday in the Derby, the Dodgers are meeting the pride of baseball's West in Cincinnati. The Reds have shown none of the accordion habits some believed they would show this year. The team that hung two stirring drubbings on the Pirates over the week-end was the same well-rounded club that at times made a runaway of the 1939 pennant race. Bucky Walters gave warning of annihilating things to come, in his Saturday performance. The Dodgers probably will get Derringer to begin with.

If it should come up mud at Churchill tomorrow we will perhaps have the answer to the question of whether Bimelech can run in the goo. The track was fast for six of his seven victories. The only other kind of footing he ran on was in a 5½ furlong race at Empire City last July. The track was judged "slow" by the chartmaker.

Ken Kling had a note the other day that Bimelech had been given an early-morning trial in the mud and had broken the timers' watches. Big Bim must be good in the mud, for Col. Bradley says he is the greatest horse he ever saw—and an old department-of-understatement-boy like the colonel wouldn't go out on a limb like that if he suspected that his pride and joy, Bimelech, was only a fair-weather friend.

Getting back to the Dodgers, who also proved on opening day that they are excellent muddlers, we note that Dixie Walker is batting .667 for them, Franks, .438; Lavagetto, 333 and the rest of the boys in the high .200's. That sort of thing can't go on forever, of course, and nobody expects it to do so. But it has given the entire club a shot of adrenalin. The Dodgers, from lead-off man to pitcher, are as hot as $2 pistols, and it's going to take the best club in the league to make them wake up from their beautiful dream.

Battle Jack Breaks Half-Mile Record

Martin's Entry Does Distance in 0:46 to Establish Mark; Winner Pays $10.10 With Brilliant Victory; Sun Egret Among Losers

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Pimlico, Md., April 29.—With the electric timer flashing 0:46, world record time for a half mile, J. W. Y. Martin's Battle Jack set a new mark for the Pimlico Spring Handicap today, running the six furlongs in 1:11 1-5, the fastest three-quarters in years at this track. The Maryland-owned horse, a son of John P. Grier and Unfurled, drove into the wire, three parts of a length in front of Speed to Spare, with Gustave Ring's Lady Maryland third and a neck from second money.

The sizzling pace and the driving finish sent the winner along at such a clip that he was only two-fifths of a second over the track record shared by Con Amore and Mainmast. Battle Jack paid $10.10.

Speed to Spare, owned by the Circle M Ranch, was author of that blistering half that marked the sprint. Jockey Johnny Gilbert had him on top in the first jump and pumped him along. Despite the fact that he was being pressed by Airflame and Drudgery, speedsters in their own right, Speed to Spare opened the best part of a length lead.

Dupps Rides Winner

Battle Jack was always within striking distance. Jockey Lucas Dupps had the mount. He was hustling Battle Jack all the way but it was not until the stretch that he was real important. Airflame and Drudgery tired nearing the stretch. Battle Jack moved up to challenge and Lady Maryland came around on the inside.

Sun Egret, slower than usual to get away, failed to become the expected threat. Dupps sent Battle Jack after Speed to Spare and the Martin horse wore down the front runner. However, Speed to Spare stuck to his running guns long enough to hold Lady Maryland safe. Sun Egret finished fourth.

The opening day program drew a crowd of 15,000, the largest weekday gathering of the Maryland season.

F. Ambrose Clark's Lancastrian, winner of a hunt race at Camden, S. C., proved a worthy favorite in his first test over a major track course and won the $2,500 added Pimlico Spring Maiden Steeplechase, today's secondary feature.

Pro Football Chiefs Accept Bill Halloran

By Jack Munhall

Smack dab in the midst of Washington's baseball frenz, professional football yesterday reared its head and talk of five-man lines and lateral and forward passes filled the air at Harvey's.

Here for an Eastern section luncheon-meeting to decide upon officials for next year's National League race were three club owners and four coaches and out of their lengthy confab emerged three fairly well established theories:

1. Bill Hewitt, Philadelphia's great but aging end, probably has played his last game for the Eagles.

2. The Eagles and also the Pittsburgh Steelers will be greatly improved because of advantageous winter trades and,

3. The Washington Redskins and not the Eastern champion New York Giants loom as the team to beat for the 1940 section title.

Mum on Business Transactions

Attending the meeting were Owner George Marshall and Coach Ray Flaherty of Washington, Owner Art Rooney and Coach Walter Kiesling of Pittsburgh, Owner and self-styled Cocoach Bert Bell of Philadelphia, and Coach Steve Owen of New York. Bell did double duty, filling in for his newly appointed Coach Heinie Miller.

About what transpired along the business end of the conference there are no available details, since selection of the officials was a closed affair. There had been rumors that Marshall, still angry at Bill Halloran's ruling on a field kick that

Pepper's Hit In Tenth Wins; Dizzy Routed

Martin Hits a Pinch Single to Beat Chicago Cubs for Cards

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Epril 29.—Pepper Martin, the St. Louis Cardinals' aging "Wild Horse," came in as a pinch hitter in the tenth inning today and singled, driving in the winning run to defeat the Chicago Cubs, 6 to 5.

The Cubs gave a near-record exhibition of futility with men on bases, stranding 17 in the regular nine innings, within one of the leagues' high mark. They loaded the bases four times, twice with one out and twice with two out, but couldn't produce a hit in the pinch. An outfield fly scored the only run in four innings.

The two teams matched homers. Terry Moore and Johnny Mize banged them for the Cards and Phil Cavarretta and Augie Galan for the Cubs.

Dizzy Dean started for Chicago and was knocked out of the box in the fifth inning after the Cardinals had pounded his "nothing ball" for eight hits and five runs. Ken Raffensberger held the Cardinals until the tenth, when Joe Medwick doubled. Harold Epps ran for Medwick and scored on the Peppers' pinch single.

Feller Wild, Tigers Beat Indians, 4-3

Detroit Scores Second Victory Over Tribe; Star Hits a Batter

By International News Service

Detroit, April 29.—Beating Bobby Feller for the second time in a row this season, the Detroit Tigers today whipped the Cleveland Indians, 4 to 3, in the series windup.

Feller's wildness led to his defeat in the eighth inning when he walked two men and hit a batter to fill the bases and then issued a pass to Dick Bartell, forcing the winning run over the plate.

Relief Hurler Al Benton, who fanned Ken Keltner and Rollie Hemsely ending the game in the ninth after he had entered the box with one out and the bases full, saved the victory for Hank Pippen.

A walk, a double, two singles and a long fly gave the Tigers three runs off Feller in the first inning. Hal Trosky doubled to deadlock the game for the Indians in the seventh frame.

Stark Given Leave To Regain Health

New York, April 29 (AP).—Umpire Albert (Dolly) Stark, of the National League, has been given a leave of absence for the remainder of the 1940 season, to recover from a "nervous condition."

Louis Jorda, veteran International League arbiter, will fill the vacancy until Stark is able to resume his work.

Bud Rosar's Single Breaks Nats' Streak

Yankees Take a 5-4 Decision in Tough Battle at Stadium; Washington Misses Chances to Gain Sixth Straight

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent

Washington's five-game winning streak failed to survive a third straight game with the Yankees yesterday, and the Nats went down to a 5-4 defeat, although they were very stubborn about it.

The Nats' stubbornness was, unfortunately, of two types. They bravely stayed in the ball game and twice wiped out two-run leads held by the Yankees, but they were persistent, too, in muffing chances to win the ball game.

Seventy-five hundred fans who constituted Griffith Stadium's largest Monday crowd in years, saw Buddy Rosar produce the winning run with a ninth-inning single that broke the 4-4 title. Walter Masterson, the third Washington pitcher of the day, was the victim of that blow. Frankie Crosetti, who led off the inning with a line drive that tore through Pofahl's glove for a single, was sacrificed to second. Masterson struck out Selkirk and purposely passed Keller, but Rosar whipped a single into leftfield to get the run home.

Case Hit by Ball

The Nats tried to steal the run back in the ninth. George Case was hit by a pitched ball at the start of the inning, but was out by a dozen feet when he tried to steal second on the next pitch. The Yankees outsmarted him by calling for a pitchout. Buddy Lewis drew a walk and succeeded in stealing second, but he languished there when Gerry Walker struck out and Zeke Bonura grounded out.

Washington outhit the Yankees, 8 to 7, but with the Yanks inviting

Louis-Godoy Fight Is Set For June 20

By the Associated Press

New York, April 29.—Promoter Mike Jacobs today got around to making the announcement everyone has been expecting since last February.

It is that Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis will meet Challenger Arturo Godoy in Yankee Stadium June 20 in what everyone hopes will not be a repetition of their 15-round crouch-and-kiss affair of last winter.

In that experiment, Godoy, a husky 27-year-old Chilean, emulated the antics of a tortoise concerned only with keeping strictly within his shell. And Louis, with no more of a target to aim at than the top of Godoy's head didn't risk those valuable hands of his by shooting any of his death-dealing punches.

As a result the thing dragged along the entire distance, and Godoy got so elated toward the end that he actually kissed Louis, thus providing the only excitement of the last ten rounds.

This time things are going to be different, voluble Al Weill, Godoy's manager, promised at the announcement party.

"Right now Godoy thinks of himself as the next heavyweight champion," chuckled Al, "what with all he learned about Louis the first time. And mebbe he's right."

"Whadda ya mean, my boy can't punch?" he howled. "Louis' best shot is that right hand, isn't it? Well, he didn't let it go all night the first time we fought him, because he was busy using it to block Godoy's left hook to the body. Godoy hits 'em where they don't like to be hit; that's his secret."

Murnane Near No-Hitter as G. W. High Nine Beats Tech, 3-2

Presidents' Star Yields Only 2 Hits

Hurls Hitless Ball In Eight Innings To Best Green in Fine Mound Duel

Alexandria, Va., April 29.—Johnny Murnane, veteran George Washington High School right-hander, held his opponents hitless in eight out of nine innings and hurled perfect ball for the first six frames today, as the Presidents took a 3-2 decision from McKinley Tech in one of the finest scholastic pitching battles seen here in years.

Murnane gave up only two hits, both coming in the seventh inning, while Charlie Green, of Tech, held the Presidents to six safeties. The McKinley hurler's wildness, however, contributed to his downfall, as the Presidents utilized walks and hit batsmen in two separate innings to record their runs.

The G. W. pitcher sent 14 Tech batters down via the strikeout route, while Green fanned 8 opponents.

The Presidents scored two runs in the second inning on a walk, a hit batsman, an error and a hit, and then added their third score in the sixth on two singles, two walks, a hit batsman and an error. They threatened in several other innings, but Green tightened up with men on bases and pitched himself out of several dangerous situations.

For the first six innings Tech failed to get a runner to first base, and Murnane appeared to be well on the way to a no-hit game when the seventh rolled around. Then, with one out in the seventh, McCampbell walked, and Paul and Lewis connected with successive singles to account for Tech's only two runs of the game.

Murnane appeared to be shaky in the eighth, and allowed two men to reach base on walks with only one out, but he settled down and halted the Tech threat by forcing Martin Green out on an easy pop fly and fanning Bryan.

No member of either team got more than a single hit.

Max Butcher Loses 5-Hitter as Craft And Werber Connect

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, April 29.—Home runs by Harry Craft and Bill Werber in the seventh and eighth innings nullified five-hit hurling by Max Butcher today as the Cincinnati Reds swept their series of three with Pittsburgh, 3 to 2.

A first-frame balk by the big portsider sent in Werber with the only other tally, although he likely would have scored on Frank McCormicks single—second and last hit allowed by Butcher until Craft connected, five and two-thirds innings later with his first circuit smash of the year.

Paul Derringer, who scattered nine hits in chalking up his second pitching triumph, set down the first seven Pirates who faced him.

With one out in the third, however, Jeep Handley singled, took second on Eddie Joost's wide throw to first, stole third and scored as Butcher followed through with a single to left.

Lloyd Waner also nicked Paul for one base in the third but the champions' inner defense tightened and the threat ended as Waner was forced by Deb Garms and Frank McCormick speared Paul Waner's fierce liner.

Handley tripled with one gone in the fifth and romped home as Butcher doubled, but again the Bucs were cut short as Max was trapped on L. Waner's grounder and Frey retired Garms.

In the Red's first-inning rally, Handley got his glove on Werber's single; the third baseman took second as Fletcher nipped Lonnie Frey and third on Ival Goodman's long fly.

Boston Blasts Out 19 Hits to Score Victory Over Mackmen; Caster, McCabe And Ross Victims; Tabor Homers

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, April 29.—Boston smashed three Philadelphia pitchers for 19 hits, including four each by Lou Finney and Ted Williams, and submerged the Athletics, 11 to 3, before 5,000 fans at Shibe Park today to win the odd contest of the three-game series.

George Caster, Lee Ross and Lester McCrabb were the victims of the Red Sox fury while Rookie Left-hander Maurice (Mickey) Harris achieved his second straight triumph, limiting the Mackmen to seven hits.

Jim Tabor, of Boston, hit his second homer of the season with one on in a five-run fourth inning and Al Rubeling got his second circuit clout of the year in the fifth for the A's.

Hoyas Hosts Today to Duke

The outstanding college golf match of the season is scheduled at Capital today with Georgetown's unbeaten squad meeting Duke, upset by L. S. U. this spring for its first defeat in two years.

Minus Bobby Brownell but boasting six other stars, including "Skip" Alexander, one of the South's best amateurs, the Blue Devils will give the Hoyas a line on their chances in the Eastern League play that starts Saturday.

Johnny Burke, the 1938 Intercollegiate champion, is expected to meet Alexander in the top match.

Central Nine, Eastern Play At 3:30 Today

A repetition of the 1939 interhigh baseball finals—at least in the matter of teams involved—provides the only public school action today, as Central and Eastern meet on the diamond of the last-mentioned at 3:30.

Central, which won last year's crucial game, 7-4, to steal the crown the Tide had worn for two straight years, will be strongly favored today. Coach Jack Ray calls the team his best ever, and observers heartily agree. Under Chief Guyon, Eastern is thought to have more than it showed against its only opponent to date, but its best is likely to be considerably short.

Barring a tie game, one or the other of today's foes take uncontested lead in the series. Each has won its only start. The Vikings drubbed Wilson, 12-0, and Eastern rode to a 6-3 decision over Tech on the strength of a five-run spree in the fourth inning.

Though not worried about the outcome, Ray will send his best pitcher, Bill Fisher, against the Tide's Warren Earhardt. The game should develop into a contest of speed-ball right-handers. Fisher can fall back on a beautiful curve, but Earhardt depends almost solely on fanning them past the batsmen.

Two other interhigh clubs will be busy, though not against each other. Western moves out to Virginia to meet Fredericksburg High, and Roosevelt plays host to Bethesda-Chevy Chase. Washington-Lee continues its neck-breaking schedule, meeting Briarley M. A. on the Arlington lot, and Blair entertains a dark-horse Landon nine. All games start at 3:30.

Eagles' Nine Meets Delaware Today

American University's baseball team, kept practically idle the past two weeks by inclement weather, will play host to Delaware this afternoon at 2:30 on the American University field. Meanwhile the Eagles track team will be invading Juniata College.

Although he has campaigned indoors and out the last two months while he smashed the world's indoor record for the shot put, Blozis has never been seen here in varsity competition.

Furr-McDowell Fight Tonight At Arena

12-Round Return Battle Crucial Test for D. C. Veteran; Padlo Back

Phil Furr's status as a headline fight attraction in his own home town will undergo what may be a final test tonight in Turner's Arena when he steps up to attempt to even the score with Wild Bill McDowell, of Dallas, Tex., in a 12-round battle.

Beaten by the hard-hitting Texan in their last meeting a month ago, Furr will be fighting to regain his No. 7 ranking in the welterweight class and for the right to appear in the main event of an outdoor show in Griffith Stadium next month.

A second loss to McDowell, who came in an underdog only to spring a surprise that snapped Furr's eight-match winning streak, will relegate Furr to the point from which he started last fall when he announced his comeback intentions.

The Furr-McDowell affair, staged before a sell-out house the first time, appears certain to draw another capacity crowd. The first battle was a slam-bang affair that led veteran fight fans to acclaim it as the best welterweight battle seen in Washington in recent years.

The 29-year-old Furr is depending upon the extra two rounds tonight to be to his advantage, despite the fact that McDowell's margin of victory in the first meeting was decided by the Texan's wading in in the final tenth round.

Furr will weigh around 148½, while McDowell, who has been working with Lou Ambers in Mme. Beys' New Jersey camp, will weigh about 150.

Galento Seeks Delay in Bout

New York, April 29.—Tony Galento, still grieving at the death of his manager, Joe Jacobs, has decided to ask Promoter Mike Jacobs for a postponment of his bout with Max Bear, scheduled for May 28 at Jersey City.

Tony, accompanied by Abe Green, New Jersey boxing commissioner, plans to visit Mike tomorrow and plead for an extension. He just had started doing roadwork on the day of Jacob's death, but has done none since.

Harry Mendell, the six-day bike promoter, and Herman Taylor, Philapelphia boxing promoter, are handling Galento's affairs temporarily. The expectation is that they will succeed Jacobs as co-managers of the Jersey nightstick.

Yanks Break Nats' Streak, Winning, 5-4

Washington Misses Chances to Win in A Tough Battle

defeat by sloppy defensive play, the Nats made a minimum of runs. Trailing, 4 to 2, in the seventh inning, the Nats limited themselves to one run in that inning. Pofahl drew a walk and moved to second on Early's single to center When Rolfe made a wild throw of Pinch-hitter Welaj's bunt, Pofhal scored and Early moved to third.

Despite the fact that none were out, the Nats achieved nothing more out of the inning. Case hit a high bounder in front of the plate and Early was out trying to score, with Catcher Roser making the putout unassisted. Lewis then eased the tension for the Yanks by hitting into a double play.

And in the eighth, Spurgeon Chandler, who had been doing a magnificent job of hurling from the start, escaped with only one run charged against him despite two errors in the inning. Crosetti put the tying run on base by making a two-base muff of Walker's pop fly to short leftfield, and Bonura's long fly to right moved Walker to third with only one out. On Travis' grounder to Crosetti, Walker scored when Rosar muffed Crosetti's low throw to the plate.

With the tying run across, and Bloodworth then delivering a single to right that moved Travis to third, the Nats had an inviting chance to take the lead. It was even more glowing when Pofahl filled the bases by beating out a bunt to Chandler, who found both first and third base uncovered. But in this emergency the Yankee pitcher slipped third strikes past Ferrell and Masterson.

Joe Krakauskas lasted only three innings against the Yankees. He gave up two runs in the first when he walked Crosetti, pitched a triple to Selkirk and single to Rosar. He was withdrawn at the end of three innings after walking six batters and Rookie Sid Hudson got the pitching job.

In the third the Nats tied the score at 2-2 with Buddy Lewis the hero of the uprising. After Early walked, Pinch-hitter Sammy West blasted a pitch back at Chandler, who lost the ball and it went for a single that moved Early to second. He was cut down at third when he tried to advance on Case's bunt to Chandler, but Lewis then belted a three-bagger to the leftfield wall to score two runs. Lewis, however, perished on third when Walker struck out and Bonura grounded out, two developments which, in fact, constituted an accurate preview of the manner in which the Nats left the tying run on base in the ninth.

After pitching one hitless inning, Hudson fell afoul of the Yanks in the fifth. In that inning they made three of their hits, with Henrich's single driving a pair of runs across the plate and setting them up in a 4-2 lead.

In the fourth, the Nats turned Jimmy Bloodworth's double against the leftfield wall with none out to no account, and in the sixth Cecil Travis' triple to left was also wasted. In the seventh, eighth and ninth—well, the Nats would prefer to forget those innings.

East Potomac Play Medal to Roy Smith

Carolinian Will Meet Art Cross in First Round; 14 Flights Paired for Matches Which Must Be Finished Sunday; 2 Tie for 2d Low

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Roy Smith's two-under par 142 of a week ago stood up for medalist honors in the East Potomac spring match play tournament yesterday and the slender North Carolinian will meet Art Cross in the first round of match play that must be concluded by Sunday.

Cross, now a member of Indian Spring, tied Harry Miller for second-low score in the 36-hole qualifying test with 146 each. Julian Williams was third with 147, while three had 148, Art Williams, Don Stone and Joe Wilson.

Fourteen full flights and a fifteenth flight of four players, 228 in all, were paired yesterday by Tommy Doerer, manager of the East Potomac Club. More than 20 flights were expected, but the rain held down the number of entries.

Second-round matches in all flights must be finished by May 13, the semifinals by May 20 and the finals by May 27. Merchandise prizes will be awarded the winners and runners-up in each flight.

Smith, who set a record for 36-hole medal play over the East Potomac championship course, will be favored in the lower half of the championship bracket, although he faces a promising amateur in Cross in his first-round match. Bob Morris, who qualified with 150, will be the choice to reach the finals from the upper half of the sixteen.

Several of the top-ranking muny golfers found their medal scores too high for the top-flight, including W. W. Seay, with 157; Harry Saunders, 148, and southpaw Larry Byers, 159. They will battle it out in the second sixteen.

Doerer, recently reelected president of the East Potomac Club, announced the club would meet Anacostia on Sunday in the first of a series of matches for the Davis trophy, while out-of-town matches scheduled include Lancaster, Pa., here May 12 and Glenwood of Richmond, here May 19.

Other officers in the club include Harry Miller, vice president; Graham Hutchison, secretary, and Kenneth Zoeller, treasurer.

Blue Devils Get 2 Hits Off Springer

Five Errors Costly To Visitors; Maisel, Burns and Keller Star for Maryland

By Jack Munhall

With utter disregard for the vaunted reputation of the invaders who had won eleven of thirteen games, the University of Maryland nine yesterday combined timely hitting and the two-hit pitching of Lefty Earl Springer to upset Duke, 6-1, before 1,000 fans at College Park.

The Blue Devils, currently the defending Southern Conference champions for the fourth successive year, looked but little like the team that previously had been beaten only by Wake Forest as it kicked in with five errors to help the Terps chalk up their fifth victory against as many losses.

With Springer in his usual stellar form and facing only three men in six of the nine innings, Maryland sewed up the game as early as the first inning with a pair of runs and added another in the second, one in the sixth and finished off with two more in the seventh.

McCahan Beaten

In dealing the Blue Devils their second setback in two years at College Park where last year they snapped Duke's 23-game winning streak in a ten-inning game, the Terps gave an impressive performance. They chased Duke's ace and previously unbeaten pitcher, Bill McCahan to the showers in three innings and fielded and ran the bases smartly throughout the game.

Only one error was charged to the Terrapins who were snapping a string of three straight Conference setbacks. "Pop" Wharton got the Terps off to an inauspicious start when he committed a two-base bobble on an infield fly by Carl Price, first Duke batter of the game, but thereafter the little shortstop was one of the fielding stars of the game. He handled five putouts, three of which were difficult fly ball chances, with a miniature gale blowing across the field.

Batting stars for Maryland were Fritz Maisel and Bob Burns, each of whom made two of the eight Terrapin hits and Hugh Keller who with his only hit of the game propelled across two mates with a towering seventh-inning triple.

First Batter Singles

Maryland wasted little time in denting the plate. Maisel opened the first inning with a single off the glove of third baseman Glenn Price. On the next pitch he stole second for the first of five bases the Terps pilfered off Duke Catcher Joe Morris and continued to third as Morris threw wildly for the first of his three errors. Maisel scored when Adam Bengoechea lined a single to left.

Bengoechea also stole second and third and crossed the plate as Morris overthrew third. However, Newton Cox, who had walked was caught in a run-down on the same play and retired at third for the final out of the inning.

Maryland made it 3 to 0 in the second. Culver drew a walk, scampered to third on Burns' single and came home as Wharton grounded out to third base. Staring the fourth Maryland was facing a different pitcher—Ed Vickers, another undefeated Duke ace—who proved troublesome until the sixth, when Maryland boosted its lead to 4 to 1. Duke had scored in the third.

Culver led off the frame with a single to right, stole second as Burns became the first of Vickery's eight strikeout victims, and pulled up at third when Morris was guilty of his third poor throw. Culver then tallied on a nice squeeze play as Wharton was thrown out by the pitcher on his bunt along the first-base line.

lost the Redskins the Eastern title to the Giants, would attempt to freeze this official out. Halloran's name, however, appears on the eligible list.

This means that if Marshall actually did object to Halloran he was alone in his objection, for two dissenters among the five team representatives could have vetoed any nomination.

Hewitt, former Michigan All-American and for the last eight years one of the outstanding players in professional football, will not play for the Eagles in 1940 if Owner Bell has anything to do with it.

Because Hewitt has admittedly slipped a great deal and because he now has a fine position with a Philadelphia Refining company, Bell has advised him to give up the professional game while he is still at the top and not continue on to become punchy.

"Bill was one of the greatest football players I ever saw," the pleasant, stockily-built Bell was saying, "and when he goes out I want the fans to remember him as such. First and last impressions are important in football just as in any other thing. It would be tragic if Hewitt continues to play, living on his reputation, until he becomes an object of pity of other players.

"Not that he's that far gone now," Bell hastened to explain. "There's no doubt that he could do us plenty of good next year, but not for more than five or ten minutes of a game. I would rather that he continue with his present job, which offers far more chances for financial advancement."

Belief among the gathering that the Redskins have a strong chance to dethrone the Giants as Eastern Division champions is founded principally on the fact that Washington's rookie-predominated team of last year will have needed experience. Moreover the Redskins, rival club owners admit, got none the worst of it in drafting last year's college stars.

Colonial Nine Blanks Wilson; Redinger Star

Jack Redinger, former Roosevelt High School pitching star, steered George Washington University's baseball club to its fourth victory of the season yesterday—a 12-0 rout of the Wilson Teachers College Owls on the South Ellipse diamond.

The lanky right-hander was in complete control of the situation for the nine innings, allowing only five scattered hits and striking out 15 Owl batters. Just to show their appreciation, his mates played almost airtight ball in the field. Art Nowaskey's two errors at second base were the only black spots in the Colonials' defense.

The hitting of George Oertel and Johnny Picco, each with two out of four, and George Garber, with three out of six, brought a large smile to Coach Ed Morris' face, however. Their batting led to a three-run splurge in the first inning and helped along with four more in the eighth for the big scoring sessions.

On Fishing

With some 40-odd thousand baits and lures on the market, and new ones being brought out every day, it is hard for even the experienced in the game to pick out the most desirable ones—almost impossible for the novice to know just what he needs most.

ACKERMAN.

No one person, nor a half a dozen for that matter, could begin to give the tyros any real information from actually fishing the various lures. It would be impossible. For that reason, the timely tips Heddon is sending to outdoor editors this spring have a very real value. Information they obtain by trial and error methods of thousands of anglers all over the country.

The operation of surface lures can be divided into three types, each calling for a separate method of manipulation, and each very effective.

The surface twitch—a method of operating a lure by moving the rod tip ever so slightly, but sufficient to juggle the bait, is most effective with floating and diving lures like the river runt, flaptail and No. 210. The floating river runt should be allowed to lie still and then be given a slight twitch so it will dive under and then come to the top. The flaptail operates a spoon at the rear which revolves gently at a slow speed, while the No. 210 has a round metal collar so constructed that in twitching, it has a hydroplane action, pushing up a big wave, and occasionally a big bubble.

The surface swim—involves the wounded spook type lure, and the new crazy-crawler we have noted so often, both surface commotion baits which can be operated at slow or fast speed. The wounded minnow has spinners front and rear which will move gently on a slow pull. Retrieved quickly, with a sharp jerk, it will make a loud, purring noise. The crazy-crawler has two large flippers in front, like arms, and when retrieved, rolls from side to side like a swimmer doing the Australian crawl. It operates simply at both slow and fast speeds.

Chugging—popping—plunking, is done with a specially constructed type of lure like the chugger spook, with a cupped front end and laying at about a 45-degree angle. The rod is given a short quick jerk of about two feet which causes the bait to dive under, catching a big bubble, and promptly leaping to the surface again. With careful operation it can be made to stand almost still in a pocket, bobbing and dancing and burbling in a very effective way. Other lures which lend themselves to chugging or popping method are the lucky 13, the basser and zig-wag.

If you haven't fished with, or learned the manipulation of surface lures, you have a new thrill coming, and a satisfaction that can only come from seeing and hearing the strike of a fish as well as feeling it.

Productive often in this section when all other baits fail, and that is true of many of our bay fishes as well as largemouth black bass in the warm waters of early season.

Man of the Month

By Arch McDonald
Station WJSV Baseball Broadcaster

Again this season, The Washington Post and Station WJSV conduct The Man of the Month contest to determine the Nats' most valuable player for each month. Following each game, Arch McDonald will distribute points to the Washington players as he deems performances merit. The Post will reward each winner of the Man of the Month contest with a $50 merchandise order.

Buddy Lewis extends his lead in the Man of the Month contest by his performance in yesterday's game. But the point award on the basis of that game is a new low for the season. We are awarding only 8 points.

To Lewis, 5 points, because his three-bagger in the third inning brought in two runs to tie the score at that point, and because he stole second in the ninth to put the potential tying run in scoring position.

To Jimmy Bloodworth, 2 points, because he doubled in the fourth and singled in the eighth to move the tying run to third base with one out.

To Jimmy Pofahl, 1 point, because he made one hit and started a sensational double play by grabbing Henrich's grounder in the fifth, stepping on second and getting the batter at first. The totals:

Buddy Lewis	23	Jimmy Pofahl	8
Gerry Walker	17	Al Hollingsworth	7
"Dutch" Leonard	16	Walter Masterson	6
George Case	15	Jake Early	5
Jimmy Bloodworth	14	Rick Ferrell	5
Cecil Travis	12	Johnny Welaj	5
Ken Chase	8	Jimmy Wasdell	2
		Bucky Jacobs	2

Fan Rushes to Rescue of A. U. Ball Club to Ease Conscience

A youthful fan whose twitting of American University's baseball club caused twinges of conscience came forward to espouse the cause of the hapless Eagles yesterday and immediately was signed up as team mascot.

The lad with the regrets is Richard Richards, of 1437 Forty-fourth street northwest, 12-year-old son of Representative James P. Richards (Democrat), of South Carolina. On a post-card to American University officials, Richard summed up his troubles thusly:

"I am sorry I rode American University in its baseball game with Georgetown. American University has a good team, it was just a bad day. Georgetown is large; American University is small, but good. It's a good college. I'm sorry the other fans rode American University also. They didn't realize American University has a good team. I want to get this off my conscience."

As a reward for clearing the situation right up, Richard will be sitting on the A. U. bench today when the Eagles play host to Delaware. Richard's father was captain of the University of South Carolina baseball team in his college days, a star of the Sally League and led the House of Representatives' softball team last summer against the gentlemen of the press in a charity game at Griffith Stadium.

Incidentally, Richard's ire, expressed with the well-known "raspberry," was brought on as Georgetown defeated American, 20-0, last week.

Dusek Leads Mat Band in Debut At Riverside

Rudy Dusek will lead a battle-scarred band of wrestling veterans into the environs of Riverside stadium tomorrow night for Matchmaker Jimmy Erwin's first venture in the field of groan artistry.

Rudy, who formerly played the major lead at Turner's arena, will face the Golden Terror in the 60-minute feature match in Riverside's new red, white and blue bedecked ring.

In the preliminaries will be Abe Coleman versus Tommy O'Toole, Cliff Olson versus Abe Yourist, Don Evans versus Angelo Savoldi and Garibaldi versus Tommy Rae.

Poland's "Strong Man" On Wrestling Card

Poland's "strong man," Wladyslaw Talun, 6-foot-7 groan artist, will head a list of wrestling freaks coming to Turner's Arena Thursday night on the card featuring Bobby Burns and Karl Zbyszko in the main event.

Promoter Joe Turner pulled another surprise out of the bag yesterday with the announcement that Nanjo Singh, the old "cobra clutch" exponent will be back in a special match against Maurice Boyer.

Milam's 428 Takes Class A Singles Lead

Burkhalter Rolls 417 for Fourth Place In City Tourney

Paul Milam, a G. P. O. and Almas Temple League bowler, took the lead in Class A singles of the Washington City Duckpin Association tournament last night at Arcadia with a 428 set from games of 125, 142 and 161.

Ernie Burkhalter's 417 set was good for fourth place in A singles and Bill Garterli's 394 fifth. Louis Rose, with 402, took second in Class B, followed by other new leaders, O. F. Enswiller, third with 398, and George Toth, 396 for fourth.

In Class C, Ed Lechlider had 399 for the temporary lead, while a 364 by O. E. Wildes went into fourth place with 364. Archie Sartwell's 371 was the new top score in Class D.

The only change in the team scores was a 1,736 by Eastern Pharmacy in class C, led by B. Reidy's 370.

A. Burzzeze and Mike Kenney turned in the highest scores in the Washington Catholic League "George Harbin" tournament at Queen Pin with 748, including an 89-pin handicap. J. McCarthy and J. Casper had 63-700, C. Manley and K. Kelley, 76-698, and I. Holbrook and P. J. Dooley, 84-647.

Highest singles scores of the night were H. Atwell's 45-380, A. Wasserman's 30-359 and C. McQuire's 33-355.

Gaylor Pigeon Wins 100-Mile Race

Broad Tail, a racing pigeon from the loft of William J. Gaylor, easily won the East Potomac Racing Pigeon Club race from Charlottesville, Va., yesterday. Flying 100 miles in 2 hours and 35 minutes, Gaylor's entry averaged 1,133.30 yards a minute to beat 468 birds from 38 lofts.

Speed in yards per minute (first 20): William J. Gaylor, 1,133.30; United Loft, 1,119; George Gateau, 1,118.90; Clark & Darnall, 1,116.68; George J. BRITTANY SPANIEL

Originated in France many centuries ago and, like most setters and spaniels, probably comes from the ancient Spanish dogs. This fellow is nearly as large as the setter and is the equal of any dog in the field. Was originally used on woodcock but is adaptable to any bird work and easily taught to retrieve.

Bimelech Faces Test for Derby Today in Trial Stakes

Bradley Ace Will Meet 10 Candidates

Pictor Will Remain In Stall Today While 'Unhopefuls' Run Against Favorite

By the Associated Press

Louisville, Ky., April 29.—Bimelech pointed his head out of the stall, nodded a friendly "Hello!" and snickered at the whole setup.

You would have sworn that Mr. Big knew as well as the next fellow what was going on. Just about everybody else realized it.

For the picture at the start of Kentucky Derby Week today found the lightning streak from Lexington not only the shortest priced favorite in the history of the Blue Grass classic, but actually running out of horses with which to work in his daily preps. So he's going to use ten other Derby candidates as work horses tomorrow in the Derby Trial Stakes, and then go against some of the same gallopers Saturday in the ride for the $75,000 brass ring.

A Snappy Workout

Bimmie has been working with the other half of Col. E. R. Bradley's bowtful, Bashful Duck, in his trials for Saturday's sixty-sixth running of the big race. But apparently the Duck got "all wore out" trying to keep up with the big fellow. As a result, he was left at Lexington.

This morning, Bimmie blew out three-eighths in a snappy 37 seconds. In previous years, it has always been the Bradley policy to give the stable's Derby hope a workout over the full mile-and-a-quarter route on Tuesday before the big race. Tomorrow will be one of the 11 who will take a crack at the Derby trial affair and then run out the full mile and 2 furlongs at the finish. The others include such Derby unhopefuls as Inscolad, Royal Man, Connaught, Potranco and Sirocco, but if it's true what they say about Bimmie the others might just as well take in a movie.

Pictor to Rest

Incidentally, you can just forget about any talk that Don Meade, and not Smith, will have the leg up on the Biblically named colt Saturday. The Bradley barn folks say there was never a thought of taking Smith off Bimmie.

None of the chief candidates for second place in Saturday's derby—the top spot is regarded as Bimmie's exclusively—will take a crack at tomorrow's mile test, although all were in their stalls here today. They are W. L. Brann's mud-running Pictor, winner of the Chesapeak Stake; Harold A. Clark's Royal Man, and Arnold Hanger's Dit, the colt that made a show of the Wood Memorial field Saturday at Jamaica.

These three—Dit arrived today and the other got in Sunday—are generally regarded as the rest of the first four in the derby. At this writing, it appears the field will be nine at the most.

Illinois Reinstates Heavyweight Fighter

Chicago, April 29 (AP).—Jack Trammell, Negro heavyweight of Youngstown, Ohio, who was suspended for life for his unsatisfactory knockout at the hands of Jimmy Adamick, Detroit, here two years ago, was reinstated by the Illinois State Atheltic Commission today.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MISTY MEADOW, $35.80, $15.50, $8.30; HASTE BACK, $5.60, $3.10; SUN THRUSH, $3.80.

MISTY MEADOW, off in the first flight, wore down SUN THRUSH to take command and barely lasted under a hard drive ahead of HASTE BACK. The latter was off in a tangle, went wide for racing room and closed with a rush on the outside. SUN THRUSH was hustled to the front in the opening furlong, was put to a hard drive and held on gamely when displaced. HOP SKIP could not keep up early, saved much ground entering the stretch and closed gamely.

SECOND RACE—One and three-sixteenths miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:46. Off at 2:47. Winner, H. Kerr's ch. g. (8), by Blind Play—Top Lady. Trained by H. Kerr. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 2:03⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PLAYMORE, $6.50, $3.60, $2.60; MASS FORMATION, $7.30, $5.00; GEN L., $2.90.

PLAYMORE, steadied along within striking distance of the leaders, improved his position sharply leaving the backstretch and held on gamely in the final drive with MASS FORMATION. The latter, in the first flight from the break, raced OFFICIATE into defeat to get to the front and fought it outwillingly. GEN L. lacked early speed and rallied mildly in the closing test.

Daily Double, MISTY MEADOW AND PLAYMORE, Paid $144.60.

THIRD RACE—About 2 miles. Purse, $2,000 added. The Pimlico Spring Handicap; steeplechase. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:17½. Off at 3:18½. Winner, P. A. Clark's br. g. (4), by Swift and Sure—Rosern. Trained by H. G. Gaither. Net value to winner, $2,500; second, $500; third, $400; fourth, $200. Time, 4:01. (15 jumps.)

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LANCASTRIAN, $4.60, $3.20, $3.30; NOTLEY (entry), $3.30, $4.40; SUSSEX (entry), $4.60.

LANCASTRIAN, steadied along within striking distance, recovered after a bad landing at the ninth fence, went to the leaders while saving ground to take command and withstood the closing bid of NOTLEY. The latter was reserved early, moved to contention boldly and came willingly under a hard drive at the end. SUSSEX was a forward factor from the start, took the lead when AMALPI fell and weakened gradually when displaced by LANCASTRIAN. MR. CHIPS raced wide and went evenly. BIG SEVERN came across the field at the start and was tiring in the closing half. KOSAN moved to contention and then faltered. AMALPI was setting the pace when he fell at the fifth fence. HANTS ran out at the sixth fence. TELLMORNE fell at the fifth fence. DUN PICKIN and GYNTAH fell at the eighth fence.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:48. Off at 3:48. Winner, J. P. McDonnell's br. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DOUBLE B., $12.90, $7.90, $4.30; SILENT HOST, $8.40, $5.40; INDIAN LODGE, $3.80.

DOUBLE B., off well and kept on the outside, moved to the leaders boldly leaving the backstretch, took a slight lead over SILENT HOST and was drawing out at the end. SILENT HOST raced on the inside throughout, disposed of FLAMING HIGH to take command and weakened nearing the close. INDIAN LODGE went to contention boldly at the final turn, but hung thereafter. MORSTEP had speed in spots.

FIFTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,500. The La Plata. For 3-year-old fillies. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:16½. Off at 4:17¼. Winner, Mrs. D. K. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TRUE CALL, $11.90, $6.00, $4.10; FAIRY CHANT, $5.30, $3.50; WITCHLIKE, $3.20.

TRUE CALL, forced wide in the early stages, was steadied along on the backstretch, rallied gamely when placed to a drive, was steered to the inside when FAIRY CHANT bore out and closed with good courage under a hard hand ride. FAIRY CHANT was allowed to settle into best stride, worked way to contention with good energy to get to the front, but swerved in the stretch run while tiring. WITCHLIKE was sent to the front under hustling tactics, set the pace to the stretch and weakened suddenly; MISS FERDINAND closed some ground from a slow beginning.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $2,500 added. The Baltimore Spring Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:46. Off at 4:47. Winner, J. W. Y. Martin's ch. h. (5), by John P. Grier—Unfurled. Trained by T. A. Bonsel, Jr. Net value to winner, $2,370; second, $300; third, $250; fourth, $100. Time, 1:11⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BATTLE JACK, $10.10, $4.90, $3.40; SPEED TO SPARE, $6.80, $4.00; LADY MARYLAND, $3.70.

BATTLE JACK, within striking distance from the start and always hard ridden, moved up gradually through the stretch to dispose of SPEED TO SPARE and won going away under strong hand ride. SPEED TO SPARE, first away, drew clear while setting the pace and held on gamely, but could not resist the winner. LADY MARYLAND lacked early speed, improved her position gradually on the outside and closed willingly. SUN EGRET was off slowly and rallied mildly in the stretch run.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:15. Off at 5:15½. Winner, G. Preston's dk. b. f. (4), by Jamestown—Titania. Trained by H. Byrne. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:46⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LOTTERY, $14.80, $6.40, $4.70; PLAY GOLD, $7.60, $6.20; SURE MISS, $5.90.

LOTTERY, within striking distance from the start, responded when placed to a drive and wore down PLAY GOLD to hold away thereafter under intermittent punishment. PLAY GOLD forced CRIUS' early pace, took command at the far turn, opened a lead, but could not resist the winner. SURE MISS was hard ridden and had no excuses. CAREFUL MISS rallied mildly. CRIUS set the early pace and weakened gradually after being displaced.

EIGHTH RACE—One and three-sixteenths miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 5:46. Off at 5:47. Winner, Liberty Lane Stable's br. g. (7), by Kai-Sang—O. Girl. Trained by W. E. Jones. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 2:02⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ALSANG, $8.10, $5.90, $4.40; GRANDIFLORA, $7.20, $5.00; ERADA, $3.30.

ALSANG, allowed to settle into his best stride and taken wide for his racing move, went to the front with a bold rush and drew out in the stretch run to win easily. GRANDIFLORA improved position along the backstretch and came gamely at the close, but was no match for the winner. ERADA moved up menacingly and hung in the final drive. CONVILLE was well placed for the half and weakened gradually thereafter.

At The Post

Dear Al: Selections at Pimlico.

Three-year-olds will hold the spotlight over here in Baltimore today. Eleven colts, geldings and fillies have been lined up for the 6-furlong sprint, the Rennert Handicap. These are the survivors of 35 nominations. The Vanderbilt Stable's Now What, 2-year-old filly champion last year, will see action for the first time. Domkin, Abrasion, Cockerel, Riggie and others will give her a run for the chief portion of the $2,500 added purse. Lest we forget, post time here is 2:15, 15 minutes earlier than the 'Graw and Bowie. Daily double closes at 2 p. m. Buster Bedwell has the Gustave Ring horses on the track this morning. Lady Maryland turned in a brisk three-eighths in 0:36 4-5, handily. Happy Gordon, pink-coated outrider, turned in some fine catches of loose horses at Havre de Grace. He is a busy man here. In addition to his afternoon duties of leading horses to the post, Gordon patrols the steeplechase course in the morning. Art Brown has dared, double-dared and triple-dared me to sing the "Happy Birthday" son on WOL some morning. Jockey Johnny Gilbert and J. J. Jones have come to a parting of the ways. I wonder if Gilbert's desire to ride Royal Man in the Kentucky Derby was the cause. At any rate, Gilbert rode against a Jones horse yesterday. Gilbert has two cute children, a boy and a girl. His wife is Jockey Don Meade's sister. Lou Schaefer, trainer for W. L. Brann and George Woolf, noted jockey, left for Louisville this afternoon. Woolf is slated to pilot Pictor, Maryland-bred hopeful, in the Kentucky Derby. Bennett, custodian of the jock's room, reported that 85 of the silks and leather boys are on hand for the Pimlico meeting. George Burke, well-known jockey agent, was on hand early this morning to handle the saddling arrangements of his charges. Mr. Burke takes care of business matters for Jockey Nick Wall and Sonny Workman who will be actively engaged at Pimlico. Wall left for Kentucky today to ride one of the W. L. Ranch hopefuls in Tuesday's Derby trial.

Confucius horse was second at good odds but that didn't help the B. R. which is now $26. For today, he say: Shalako for two slugs.

First race—Hanid and Thrift Shop, coupled as an entry under the colors of Jerome Loucheim, are both first time starters but are reported capable of handling this bunch. Hanid is a full sister to Blablah and Careful Dinah. Nancy raced well at Harve and might be the one to beat. McHenry comes from a good stable.

Second race—Miss Ponne has not been able to threaten running with $2,000 platers but if sound should have little difficulty whipping these cheap ones. Burner had no excuse last start but the remainder of the contention isn't much and she figures next best. Wintona may be close at a price.

Third race—Rideaway was consistently close when pitted against competition of this sort in his races last year. Figures give him the edge in an open race and he should win if fit. Budos raced on the flat last year and may make a creditable showing. Hop appears capable of earning third place.

Fourth race—Phara Belle displayed good speed to finish five lengths back of Cerisse III in her recent Havre race. She meets inferior competition today and should register. Argella has run two sparkling races this spring and will be the one to beat. Greeny receives the call over the others.

Fifth race—Asp was beaten three lengths by Dit, recent winner of the Wood Memorial, a week ago at Jamaica. This bunch is very mediocre and the stands out as the best bet of the day. Scylla raced well in allowance races in Kentucky and rates best of the others. Hard Way may be a money factor.

Sixth race—Cockerel was third to Andy K and Royal Man, making his seasonal bow at Harve. He should improve off that race and he is placed in a better spot today. Now What was the best juvenile filly of last year but making her first start with a high impost may prove too much. Merry Knight is a dangerous factor.

Seventh race—Pompier closed gamely behind Zayin on closing day at Harve to lose by a three-length margin. He appears well placed with these cheaper grade platers. Canterup won his last in the mud and in the event of an off track would be tough to beat. Bo Beau for show.

Eighth race—Scarer accounted for his last two heats at Keeneland in convincing fashion. He is in grand shape and the chief contention here appears to be several "has beens." Zevson has class but has gone way back. Presidential could win if sound.

Best bet—Asp.

SEC Reports Quarter Registrations Double Volume of 1939

An offering by the Union Pacific Railroad through Kuhn, Loeb & Co. of $81,602,000 in 3½ per cent refunding bonds, one of the largest refinancing operations in recent months, yesterday disclosed another company is seeking to take advantage of cheaper money for its funded debts.

Last week, the United States Steel Corp. announced a $75,000,000 offering, while the Texas Corp. and others have announced or offered new issues, the funds from which will be used to retire 4 and 5 per cent issues now outstanding.

Coincidental with the Union Pacific announcement, the Securities and Exchange Commission divulged that registrations during the first quarter of 1940 were twice as large as during the comparable period last year.

Effective registrations through March in this year totaled $467,410,000, of which $380,617,000 represented securities offered for sale, as compared with $214,557,000 in the first quarter of 1939, the commission's research and statistics section noted.

The Union Pacific issue and other company money will be used to redeem at 107½ some $85,902,000 in the line's 4 and 5 per cent first lien and refunding mortgage bonds. The new issue is offered at 102 and accrued interest to date of delivery.

Montgomery Ward & Co. filed with the Securities Commission yesterday a proposal to sell 772,910 shares of new common stock, of no par value at $40 a share. Of the proceeds, $6,000,000 would be spent in the next two years for additions to capital assets. The balance would be added to working capital.

The Securities Commission reported the largest amount of registrations for any industry group was shown for manufacturing companies, which registered $166,449,000, or 43.7 per cent of the total proposed for sale by issuers. Almost two-thirds of the total for the manufacturing group represented issues of steel companies, which aggregated $105,607,000. Next in importance among the major industry groups were the electric, gas and water utility companies with $147,647,000, or 38.8 per cent of the total. Financial and investment companies with $33,049,000 accounted for 8.7 per cent of the total, and transportation and communication companies with $23,852,000 accounted for 6.2 per cent of the total. The remainder was distributed among extractive and merchandising companies.

Fixed interest-bearing securities totaled $287,291,000, or 75.5 per cent of the aggregate amount proposed for sale by issuers. Long-term secured bonds represented 55.3 per cent of the total and long-term unsecured bonds, 20.2 per cent. This left only 24.5 per cent for all equity issues combined. Common stock led all other types of equity securities with $56,370,000, or 14.8 per cent of the total. Preferred stock aggregated $28,733,000, or 7.5 per cent, while certificates of participation amounted to $8,223,000, or 2.2 per cent.

A detailed breakdown of registration statistics for the first quarter of 1940 indicates that 84 statements covering 116 issues, became effective in the gross amount of $467,410,000. Substitute securities, such as voting trust certificates and certificates of deposit, totaled $9,041,000, and securities registered for the account of others amounted to $8,140,000, of which $5,198,000 was proposed for sale. This left $450,229,000 of securities, of which $380,617,000 was proposed for sale by issuers. The difference of $69,612,000 represented mainly securities to be issued in exchange for other securities amounting to $53,947,000 and securities reserved for conversion totaling $13,210,000. The securities of new ventures aggregated only $11,659,000, equivalent to 3.1 per cent of the total amount proposed for sale by issuers.

Compensation to be paid to underwriters and agents was $11,664,000, or 3.1 per cent of the total proposed for sale by issuers. Other issuing and distributing expenses were $2,613,000, or .7 per cent of the total.

Aviation, Paper and Marine Issues Show Strength in Apathetic Trading; List Closes Irregularly Higher .13 Point

New York, April 29.—Strength in aviation, paper and marine stocks featured the dullest stock exchange trading since March 18 today. Only 566,950 shares changed hands and the general market displayed no consistent determination to move in either direction. It closed irregularly higher, with the composite average up .13 point.

Speculators who have confidence in the market's immediate future and a number of the investment companies are devoting a major share of their attention to special situations rather than in in-and-out trading in the so-called pivotal leaders.

Grumman Aircraft Rises

International Paper was today's most active stock, a total of 19,200 shares changing hands and edging through to new highs. Grumman aircraft, a newcomer to the big board after a seasoning process on the Curb Exchange, was next in order and likewise made a new 1940 top. The marine division of the market was led by American Hawaiian Steamship, up 1½ to a new high.

Throughtout the irregularity of the last few weeks there has been less and less heard of the threat of foreign liquidation. Immediately on the outbreak of war last September it was made clear that foreign liquidation would be handled carefully.

Consequently, the question arises why this government, through any proposed legislative measure, should seek to place any new regulation in the path of the orderly liquidation of American securities held abroad.

Business news held to the favorable side today. In line with expectations there was a rise in steel operations, representing last minute buying before May 1 at which time the recent cut in a number of steel products will be rescinded.

Modest Dealings in Bonds

Dealings were modest today in the listed bond market, where a firm undertone in domestic issues contrasted with softness in foreign dollar obligations. High grade investment bonds were advanced slowly but impressively, under the leadership of United States Treasury securities. There were occasional bright spots among the local corporate issues. The only real sour note was discernible in the foreign department, where some sharp losses occurred.

Demand for best grade investments was in evidence throughout the session. Long term Treasury bonds showed advances of about ¼ point.

Australian bonds were 2 to 3 points lower in the foreign department, and Canadians also lost ground, presumably on Norwegian reports. German bonds were irregular. Scandinavian bonds held around previous levels.

Steels Earn $140,394,000 During 1939

Institute Reports Industry Lost Money in 5 Out of 10 Years

Steel companies earned $140,394,000 during 1939 after meeting all charges but before paying dividends, according to reports received by the American Iron & Steel Institute from a group of companies accounting for more than 90 per cent of the industry's total output.

The same group of companies "went into the red" in 1938 to the extent of over $14,506,000 before paying any dividends, and the record of the steel industry as a whole over the 1930-1939 decade shows that the industry lost money in five of the ten years.

Combined earnings of the industry in the five years in which the industry did not lose money offset by a narrow margin the aggregate losses in the five unprofitable years (1931-1934 and 1938). As a result the industry's return on investment over the ten-year period averaged only 1.8 per cent.

Total pay rolls of the reporting companies last year, including pay rolls of certain subsidiary companies which do not produce iron or steel products, amounted to nearly $971,000,000, compared with $730,000,000 the year before.

Sears Roebuck

Sears Roebuck & Co. earned approximately $7,641,000 in the three months ended April 30, Robert E. Wood, chairman, told stockholders at the annual meeting. The earnings equal $1.35 a share, compared with $5,902,000, or $1.06 a share in 1939.

Wood disclosed the big merchandising company planned to open about 25 new stores this year. A large unit in Washington will be started for operation next year, he noted.

Stockholders approved a proposal for issuing 125,000 shares of capital stock for sale to employes at $80 a share.

Crosley Corporation

Crosley Corporation reported today net profit of $42,807 for the first three months, after provision for depreciation and Federal income tax, compared with $205,916 for 1939's like period.

C. N. O. & T. P. Lines

Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Co., reported today operating income for March of $502,145, against $454,302 for March, 1939. Total for the first three months was $1,258,474, against $1,213,629 a year ago.

Gannett Co.

Gannett Co. and wholly-owned subsidiaries reported March quarter consolidated net profit of $260,680, including equity in undistributed net profits of controlled companies, compared with $216,141 for the first quarter last year. Equity of Gannett Co. in undistributed net profits of controlled companies was placed at $37,169. Company publishes newspapers in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Illinois.

Ford Motor of Canada

With Canada committed to cooperation with the British Empire in the European war, "every person and every enterprise" will be called upon for further sacrifices, Wallace R. Campbell, president of the Ford Motor Co. of Canada, told the annual meeting of the company's shareholders. He said the company's sales in 1939 totaled $43,734,289, or 6.6 per cent less than in 1938, but that there had been a marked improvement in the last quarter of 1939.

Cotton Erratic In Thin Market; 2 Down to 3 Up

New York, April 29 (AP).—Cotton futures swayed narrowly in a thin market today. The final range was 2 points lower to 3 points higher. Prices pointed upward at the start in line with the behavior of overseas markets. Gains were emphasized by trade price fixing and Wall street demand.

When the market had moved up 3 to 7 points, however, traders gave a little more thought to widespread rains. An increasing number of hedges was attracted and the back of the advance was broken. Closing prices were midway between the day's highs and lows.

Range follows:

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil futures drooped 1 to 6 points today after a short-lived rally petered out. Sales totaled 87 contracts; May, 6.79 bid; July, 6.87; September, 6.95; October, 6.95 bid; December, 6.98 bid.

Crude oil was barely steady on the basis of 5¼ cents a pound bid in the Southwest, 5⅛ bid in the Valley and 5⅛@5¼ bid in Texas.

Oil Company Allows For War

New York, April 29 (AP).—The Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., worldwide marketer of petroleum products, disclosed today it had changed its accounting procedure to allow for war shocks and had set aside on its books $37,612,780 representing property in European war zones.

The changes were made before the fighting began in Scandinavia. They covered subsidiary operations in Germany, France, England, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and Austria.

Net income for 1939 amounted to $34,452,710, equal to $1.10 a share on the capital stock, compared with $40,106,917, or $1.29 a share, in 1913

Foreign Markets

London, April 29 (AP).—Small offerings were sufficient to depress prices in sluggish security dealings today. An exception was the gilt-edged list, which overcame early hesitancy and closed around the point higher. Rails were further unsettled by announcement the government dividend limitation plan would affect carriers. Losses of a few pence prevailed among industrials and most commodity stocks were marked dow

Paris.—Demand for rentes helped steady other quotations in the bourse today after early weakness. Rentes rose 70 to 110 centimes, helped in part by recent firmness of the London gilt-edged market. Most in demand elsewhere were domestic bank, coal mining, chemical, steel and motor shares.

Amsterdam.—American issues moved briskly forward in the bourse, influenced by favorable U. S. business news. The demand spread to domestic equities, which closed with small gains after early irregularity.

Liverpool.—Cotton futures closed 3 points higher to 1 lower today. End of the month trade calling and scattered buying steadied prices.

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.

Listen!

with Slocum

This thing is being written before our derring-do Senators take the field against the New York Yankees in the third game of their series, but while our hearts belong to Daddy Griff the Yankees have our very best wishes. I might add the entire staff of Station WJSV joins me in this prayer.

You may remember that Arch McDonald wore his Sunday go-to-meeting suit last Wednesday, plus a ten-gallon hat, which he hoped would break the Nats' losing streak. It did very nicely, and they haven't lost a game since, and Arch continues to wear the suit and the hat.

One of the greater joys around WJSV is seeing the McDonald appear in any of his many interesting suits. Now he wears a uniform and swears he will continue same until the Senators lose. Just among us, I think Mr. McDonald would not be too unhappy if he had to change suits, if only long enough to get the current good luck charm off to a tailor.

Speaking of A. Leffingwell McDonald, he is now on the night shift at WJSV. In addition to his ball games in the afternoon he does a sports review at 9:45 p. m. and at 10:30 he does a half hour of nonsense and records in the McDonald manner. That is in effect every evening save Friday, when he organizes a trek to Silver Spring to visit the wife and kiddies.

Only the other day he was reminiscing fondly of those gay days of 1939 when he worked in New York and got a comparatively ample opportunity to meet up with Mrs. McDonald, the three McDonald children and the Mexican mice, to say nothing of the famous red-headed monkey, "Godfrey."

LEAP YEAR LADY by ALMA SIOUX SCARBERRY

Smoky O'Toole's troubles piled up once they started. Karl Hetrick, whom she was to marry, wed Dagne Olsen instead. Smoky found a chorus job in a new musical show and there met Tex Stacy, cowboy singer. After the show opened, Smoky and Tex were married, but tragedy was just behind. Smoky's invalid father, Clancy, lost his life saving Dagne Hetrick when her house caught on fire, but Dagne died, too. When Smoky returned to the show, Gogo LeMaire warned her not to take the part with Tex in his skit, but Tex walked in on them and told LeMaire to stop annoying Smoky. Shortly afterwards Tex was thrown from a horse and seriously injured. Smoky was stunned and felt helpless and it was painful to have Mrs. Hetrick speak bitterly of all that had happened. Thinking of what Clancy would want her to do, Smoky determined to do all she could for Tex and decided to use Clancy's insurance for his expenses. That night a private detective called on Smoky.

Chapter 21

THE DETECTIVE lit a cigar. "Sorry to hear that. It'll be quite a blow to his old man."

Smoky's heart leaped with relief. Tex's father! Maybe it was his father who was looking for him. And not the police.

"I wanted to let his family know he was sick," Smoky said guardedly. "But I can't seem to find the street address."

The man laughed. "You don't need a street address for the Governor of a State, lady. All you got to do is to call up the Capital."

Shamrock stared at the stranger speechlessly. When he saw the expression on her face he looked at her closely.

She Learns Tex's Identity

"Say," he took the cigar out of his mouth, "you look surprised. Don't you know who your husband's old man is?"

Smoky's white face flushed. She was trapped hopelessly. If she found out what she had to know she would have to tell the truth. She looked down at her hands. "No," she said uncertainly. "We've never discussed it. I—it would be hard to explain. We were married very suddenly."

The detective grinned. "Are you on the level? You're a chorus girl, ain't you?"

"Yes. I'm a dancer in Snapshots. It's my first show."

"Did you think," the man grinned again, "that you'd married a Texas cow puncher?"

"Yes," Smoky said.

The man chuckled. "I'd found out he'd been going around in a funny get-up pretendin' to be a cowhand. I guess he got the idea from playin' in amateur things at Harvard. The last his folks heard of him he was to play a Western part in a show there. Then he drops off the face of the earth.

"I traced him to Broadway and finally run down a guy who had seen him and said he bet he was Tex Stacy, the new singing sensation. His hotel gave me your forwarding address. That's the one he'd given them. I inquired around the corner down here and got a line on you. I've been waitin' for you to get home. I didn't want to go to the theater."

His Father Is Governor

"I'm glad you didn't." Smoky was very pale. "Is it Tex's father who hired you to find him?"

The man nodded.

"I'm—glad he isn't in trouble," she sank back in her chair.

"He's in for plenty of trouble," the detective predicted darkly. "The Governor is going to raise plenty of hell when he finds out his only child, heir to all his millions, has walked off and married a chorus girl."

Smoky said faintly: "Oh—he—he's a rich man."

"Only the richest man in New England," the detective assured her. "And a guy that stops at nothing when he makes up his mind to have his own way. Gosh, I'm feelin' kind of sorry for you, kid. You seem like a square shooter. I guess you married the guy for love, eh?"

Smoky's long lashes hid the pain in her eyes. "What else would I marry him for?" she asked evasively.

"Well, I guess he must have married you for the same reason," the detective wriggled uncomfortably. "I'm a romantic old fool myself. If there was any way out, I'd pull out and let you two love birds make a getaway from the old man."

"You think Tex's father will be mad about his marriage?" Smoky held her trembling knees.

"He'll blow his top," the man predicted grimly. "Bill was engaged to old Mike Lowery's daughter, and Mike controls half the votes in the State."

"Bill—who's Bill?"

"William Thayer Stacy, jr. Your husband."

"Oh," said Smoky blankly.

Urges Smoky to Fight

"I guess," said the man, "I'll have to call his old man tonight and tell him where Bill is. What hospital is he in?"

"St. Agnes." Smoky covered her face with her hands.

"Ah, say," the man said uncomfortably, "keep your chin up, Mrs. Stacy. If your husband loved you enough to marry you, I guess when he's up and about he can handle the Governor."

"You—said," Smoky choked, "he was engaged to another girl."

"Alicia Lowery," the man nodded. "The engagement had just been announced a week when Bill walks off the campus and drops off the face of the earth. Maybe he couldn't go through with it. I can't say I blame him. She's a stuck-up cold one if I've ever seen one. But a marriage between Bill and her would set the Governor up right, even for President next time maybe."

He stopped suddenly: "Say, listen to me shoot off my mouth. That's bad policy for a guy in my business. But you look like a right guy. I like your spunk. Are you Irish?"

Smoky smiled wanly: "With a name like Shamrock O'Toole, what would I be?"

The detective got up. "Well, just you get your Irish up and fight, Mrs. Stacy. I'll put in a call to the Governor and tell him the news. Keep your chin up now."

Smoky did not go to bed that night. She was much too upset over the visit of the detective, and the revelation that Tex was the son of a millionaire Governor.

Why had he disappeared the week his engagement was announced? What had ever possessed him to masquerade as a Texas cowboy? She had told him he was losing his Texas drawl and he had chuckled: "I'll have to watch it. I'll lose our meal ticket."

No wonder he had seemed the most perfect gentleman she had ever known. He was born to money and was a student in his last year at Harvard.

How awful the little house in Astoria must have seemed to him after living at the State Capitol, surrounded by servants and luxuries that she had never seen.

Strangely, he had seemed to enjoy being with her and Clancy and had eaten her home-cooked meals as if he were starved. There was only one answer in so far as Shamrock could see. She told herself that only a man sincerely in love could have done such a thing. What other reason could he have had for marrying her and keeping his true identity a secret?

She Visits Tex Again

Perhaps Tex had been afraid to let her know who he was. Afraid she might want his money and take advantage of the fact that his father was a famous man. He hadn't trusted her. She winced, but admitted to herself that she couldn't blame him for anything he might think under the circumstances.

Smoky lay on the couch, staring into space, or walking around the living room nervously until morning came. Then she had fruit and coffee and dressed and went to the hospital.

Her face was so white and strained, Tex's nurse said sympathetically: "You haven't slept, Mrs. Stacy. You poor dear. The doctor will have you for a patient next."

It was the day nurse, Miss Claire, middle-aged, tall and raw-boned. She looked like a woman who knew her business and Smoky liked her instantly.

"No," Shamrock admitted. "I've been so worried."

Tex was unconscious and Smoky choked back her tears. She felt so helpless. If only she could do something for him. She would have liked to send the nurses away and take care of him herself.

At 10 o'clock, Smoky took the insurance policy to Attorney Hill and he called the hospital and said he would be responsible for Mr. Stacy's bills until the policy was cashed. Smoky then went back to the hospital, feeling greatly relieved.

Tex's Mind Is Blank

In the afternoon at 4 o'clock Tex regained consciousness. Smoky was sitting in the waiting room down the hall when Miss Claire called her. "Dr. Stiller would like to see you, Mrs. Stacy," she told Smoky. "In his office."

The doctor stood by the window. He turned, smiling: "You husband has regained consciousness Mrs. Stacy."

"Oh," Smoky sat down swiftly. "Oh, I'm so glad."

The doctor sat down at his desk. "He came out of his coma about a half-hour ago. But I believe he has amnesia."

WHAT IS PA GOING TO DO ???

DON WINSLOW OF THE NAVY — West to the Orient — BY FRANK MARTINEK

GEE! DON - YOUR PLANE WILL JUST MAKE CONNECTIONS IN SAN FRANCISCO WITH THE HAWAIIAN CLIPPER
THAT'S THE GENERAL IDEA, SON
WITH LUCK I'LL REACH CALCUTTA IN ABOUT NINE DAYS
DOGGONE IT, SKIPPER! I'LL SURE MISS YOU!
THAT'S ALL THAT BOTHER'S ME TOO, OLD BOY - BREAKING UP OUR TEAM FOR AWHILE
WELL, HAPPY LANDINGS IN TIBET. JUST WATCH YOUR STEP WITH THOSE LAMAS - AND HURRY BACK!
IF I COULD ONLY MAKE SENSE OUT OF ALL THIS - MAYBE HE KNOWS WHAT HE'S DOING BUT - I WONDER!

MARY WORTH'S FAMILY — By Dale Allen

TELEGRAM FOR MRS. MARY WORTH!
THAT'S ME!... I MEAN THAT'S HER! AW, GOSH! YOU TAKE IT, MARY... I'M TOO JITTERY!
I REALLY OUGHTA SING IT TO YOU, MA'AM!
THANKS, YOUNG MAN! BUT WE'LL TAKE THE MESSAGE WITHOUT MUSIC!
OH, BILL! THIS IS WONDERFUL!
OKAY! STOP CRYIN' LONG ENOUGH T'TELL ME WHY YOU'RE SO HAPPY!
LISTEN! "JOHN AND I MARRIED THIS AFTERNOON! ON OUR WAY NOW TO ATLANTIC BEACH FOR TWO WEEKS. LOVE - LEONA STOCKPOOL BLACKSTON."
HECK! AN' WE WASTED ALL THAT WORRY ON THEM TWO!

DONALD DUCK — The Ole Swimming Hole — BY WALT DISNEY

THEY LET FELLAS SWIM
ON A SHIP, UNCA DONALD!
WELL, Y' KNOW IT, NOW! LAST ONE IN IS A DONKEY!

KING OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED

THEN HE'S SLIPPED THROUGH OUR CORDON, MEN, AND HEADED FOR THE WOODS!
WHEW! NOBODY'S THOUGHT OF LOOKING IN THIS TRUNK AND THE INSPECTOR'S PRACTICALLY LEANING ON ME!
YOU'RE NOT GOING TO LEAVE A DEFENSELESS WOMAN ALONE WITH AN ESCAPED KILLER PROWLING AROUND?
DON'T WORRY, MISS BRENNER, WE'LL GET KING!
IT'S HARD TO BELIEVE, BUT KING'S ACTIONS ARE DEFINITE AND CONCLUSIVE PROOF OF HIS GUILT!
NOT KING'S ACTIONS, YOU FOOLS - BUT MY WELL-LAID PLANS!
